Sir,

The departure of Mr. Dimes, an English gentleman, for Bonn — affords me an opportunity of transmitting to you a small packet, whose contents it is equally a duty and a pleasure to present to your indulgent inspection. You will find some sheets of a work not yet published; they are devoted to the literary history of the country which has the honour of calling you her son, — and their only claim to your notice is founded on their comprehending a brief and necessarily imperfect transcript of the valuable Lectures which you deliver on that subject in the University of Bonn.
