

PLATE XIV.

	Page.
Palæaster Clarkei , De Koninck	71
Fig. 1. Impression of the abactinial surface, with the madreporiform plate in situ .
Fig. 2. A similar impression, with some of the imprints of the marginal plates preserved.
Tribrachiocrinus Clarkei , McCoy	90
Fig. 3. An internal cast of the calyx, showing the infra-basal plates, the heptagonal basal plate, and the anal plate.
Phialocrinus ? nodosus , Eth. fil.	112
Fig. 4. An internal cast, seen from below, with the five infra-basal and five basal plates in position.
Fig. 5. The same, side view, reversed upwards, to bring prominently forward the large nodes of the basal plates.
Radial Plate ?	116
Fig. 6. Impression of an undetermined radial plate (? Actinocrinus), with radiating sculpture.
Basal Plate	116
Fig. 7. Impression of a basal plate (? Tribrachiocrinus), the sculpture consisting of tubercles and radiating ridges.

Figs. 1 and 2, from Ravensfield Quarry, near Farley.
 3 and 6 „ Nowra.
 „ 4 and 5, „ Copper Point, Shoalhaven.
 Fig. 7, „ Jamberoo.