50

53. φθόνος Markland and Matthiae.

49. Θεστιάδι] Euripides is fond of these patronymic adjectives—other exx. are Τυνδαρίς, Τυνδάρειος, Ἡράκλειος, Πε-λιάς, Τιτανίς.

50. Φοίβη] not mentioned elsewhere except by Ovid Her. VIII. 77. ἐμὴ ξυνάορος] It is usual in a Euripidean prologue for the speaker to announce his (or her) name. In this case Ag. sufficiently declares who he is when he says that his wife's name is Clytaemnestra.

52. μνηστῆρες ἦλθον] As a secondary predicate to ἐλθεῖν an adjective or verbal noun often indicates a purpose: ταύτης μνηστῆρες ἦλθον is equivalent to ταύτην ἦλθον μνηστεύσοντες. Cf. Isocra-tes Enc. Hel. p. 216 ὑπεριδόντες τοὺς οἴκοι γάμους ἦλθον ἐκείνην μνηστεύσοντες.
So Hec. 239 οἷσθ' ἠνίκ' ἦλθες Ἴλιου κατὰσκοπος. Or. 1300 ἔλθ' ἐπίκουρον ἐμοῖσι φίλοισι. Ion 297 ἐπίκουρος ἐλθών. Ἑλ-λάδος] this gen. may depend purely on νεανίαι or (better) partly also on τὰ πρῶτ' ὠλβισμένοι which words are a 'tragic', i.e. somewhat grandiose variety of the simple ὀλβιώτατοι. Cf. for the gen.

Soph. Ajax 435 τὰ πρῶτα καλλιστεῖ' ἀριστεύσας στρατοῦ, and ib. v. 1300 στρα-τοῦ τὰ πρῶτ' ἀριστεύσας.

53—57. 'And it was frightful to hear one threaten the other with death if he failed to win the maiden. So difficult was the decision, the giving and the refusing alike, that her father Tyndareos was at a loss how to enjoy fortune's blessing without disaster'.

53. κατ' ἀλλήλων] But for these words the sentence would imply that each suitor threatened Tyndareos with death if his request were refused.
