

Handwritten text in an early German script (likely Gothic or similar), written in a dense, cursive style. The text is organized into several lines, with some lines beginning with a decorative flourish or initial letter. The script is highly stylized and difficult to decipher without specialized knowledge of the dialect and historical context.

Handwritten text in an early German script, continuing from the left page or as a separate entry. It follows a similar cursive style. The text is dense and occupies the majority of the right page's content.