NAVAL REVIEW IN THE SOLENT.

The King and Queen Alexandra held a grand review of 188 ships of all classes in the Solent on Saturday. The ships covered an area of 24 miles. The Swedish squadron took part in the review.

THE BELFAST DISQUIET.

A serious disturbance took place in Belfast about noon on Saturday, when some strikers attempted to drive a horse and van into York Dock. The police were stoned, and several baton charges had to be made before the mob were dispersed. A constable was severely injured. One man was arrested.

It was officially announced that the Belfast carters' strike had been settled, excepting for some minor details.

It is stated that the men have agreed to allow the masters to cart to the English steam-ship companies affected by the dockers' strike, and have given way on the point as to whether the union should be recognised. The masters have accepted the men's terms regarding wages.

One hundred of the disaffected police were transferred to different parts of Ireland, and 150 more were to follow yesterday.

A conference between the masters and the men's trade union delegates sat on Saturday to adjust the final details in the labour dispute. Meanwhile the railway companies' steam trolleys and motor wagons are escorted by squads of Irish Constabulary, soldiers again being on duty at the docks.

NEWS FROM AMERICA.

The Federal Court has imposed a fine of 29,240,000 dollars on the Standard Oil Company for accepting freight rebates. The Company has appealed.

THE MEETINGS OF MONARCHS.

King Edward's arrival in Wilhelmshöhe, where His Majesty will be the guest of the Kaiser, is arranged for August 14th, 9.05 a.m. The Emperor and his sons will meet King Edward at the station whence the Royal party will drive to the castle in auto. Although the visit is to be of a private character the Emperor has ordered the garrison of Kassel together with the schoolchildren to line the streets.

The meeting of the Emperor and the Czar which, as already announced in our Sunday number, took place at 10 a.m. on Saturday off Swinemünde on board the Russian Imperial Yacht, was followed by a series of festivities such as a Naval parade and dinners on board both Imperial Yachts, both Kaisers exchanging hospitalities.

The German papers all comment on the visit of the Czar, laying special stress on the fact that no special political importance is to be attached to a meeting of two friendly neighbours.

AUSTRIAN PRESS OPINION.

The Vienna Fremdenblatt in discussing the Imperial interview at Swinemünde states that today, as at the last meeting, there is no need for any explanation or any special understanding between Russia and Germany; not even anti-German acuteness would be able to make out this time, as it did after the meeting at Bjoerkoe, that the German Emperor advised the Czar as to the internal affairs of his Empire. Of course, the great problems of foreign politics would be discussed, but the object of the discussion would not be to create a new political situation but only to establish an understanding in judging the situation as it is.

The meeting at Swinemünde is a gratifying testimony to the stable equilibrium that has been attained between the chief groups of the great European Powers, an agreeable symptom of the general political situation, a proof of the cordial warmth of the footing on which the two Sovereigns stand to each other, and of the good relations subsisting between Germany and Russia. The Austrian Monarchy can but rejoice at such a proof of the relationship existing between Germany and Russia, and which is so fully in unison with her own intentions. Austria's warmest sympathies are offered to the meeting of the Emperors Nicolas and William. The German Empire is Austria's ally, Russia has for many years been Austria's friend. The agreement arrived at years ago between Austria-Hungary and Russia on the Balkan question has been more and more widened and deepened. The Balkan policy of the two powers has more and more met with the assent of all the Powers. Austria-Hungary can, without doubt, enter the renewed declaration of the understanding between her allies and Russia, her friend, as an asset in her political accounts. The object of the meeting of the Emperors is directed against no one; no one has reason for suspicion.

NEWS FROM FRANCE.

TERRIBLE AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENT.

Two Bordeaux journalists who desired to ascertain facts as to a reported accident during the automobile reliability test, started in an automobile and collided with one of the racing cars, in consequence of thick dust. The three occupants of the racing car were killed on the spot, while two chauffeurs accompanying the journalists died shortly after the accident.

The journalists themselves were very seriously injured, and one of them, according to later reports, succumbed on Sunday evening.

The test race was, in consequence of these sad occurrences, stopped at once.

FIRING EXERCISES REPEATED.

In consequence of the poor results of the firing exercises during the naval manoeuvres M. Thomson, Minister of Marine, has ordered a repetition of these exercises with the heavy guns.

ANOTHER NAVY ACCIDENT. NARROW ESCAPE.

On board the French cruiser "Bouvet" a fire was discovered and extinguished just before it reached the powder-magazine. Clothes saturated with oil were found quite close by, and a strict enquiry has been set on foot.

A TERRIBLE RAILWAY ACCIDENT.

The engine of a train running between Angers and Poitiers left the rails on a bridge over the Loire near Ponts-de-Cé. The engine and tender, the luggage-van and a third class carriage fell into the river. Fifty people are said to have been killed, while sixteen were seriously injured.

EARTHQUAKES ON THE CONTINENT.

The shocks which were registered by the seismographic instruments in Berlin and Hamburg on Thursday were localised in Mostar (Herzegovina), lasting 10 seconds. The populace left their dwellings in a panic. Many houses show cracks; roofs and chimneys have fallen in. There was a tropical heat at the time. Half an hour after this shock another severe one was felt in Serajevo.

SHIPPING ACCIDENTS.

The stranding of the Hamburg-America S. S. "Teutonia" is reported by Lloyds to have taken place on July 20th, four miles off Ras Madraka. She is a total wreck. 16 of the crew are missing.

Another accident to a steamer of the same company is reported from New York where on Friday night the S. S. "Graf Waldersee" grounded on entering the harbour. She got off again with the tide without having been damaged.

MOROCCAN AFFAIRS.

Two batteries of the garrison of Algiers as well as a squadron of chasseurs à cheval and a battalion of tirailleurs of the garrison of Blidah are in readiness for embarkation at Oran to Morocco.

The situation in Casablanca on Friday was still very serious; the Bashaw is not able to cope with it. 200 Spaniards have taken refuge at the consulates. The murdered Europeans have been buried. The Christian cemetery is said to have been destroyed. Three Europeans are missing.

The armoured cruisers "Gloire" and "Jeanne d'Arc" as well as the transport "Nive" under the command of Admiral Philibert left Toulon for Morocco on Saturday night.

The troops for Casablanca including two battalions, two batteries and 300 cavalry will be under General Drude, who has spent most of his time in the colonial service and is said to be a very energetic officer.

A Cabinet council in Madrid on Sunday lasted five hours and was engaged in discussing the French Note on the Moroccan affair. Journalists received on enquiry no information as to the business transacted. The war-minister declared that 500 troops would be sent to Africa on board a man-of-war; Spain would probably take but a small part in the operations.

THE MINING DISASTER.

We are glad to be able to report that no men were killed in the firedamp explosion in the König mine on Saturday, as we had stated in our Sunday's issue. Only 8 men were slightly hurt; the others all came to the surface safely.

PEKIN—PARIS EN AUTO.

Prince Borghese arrived in Kovno on Saturday; he reached the German frontier at 4.45 a.m. on Sunday where he was received by members of the Imperial and the Königsberg Auto Clubs. He continued on his way at 7 a.m. and arrived at Königsberg at 10.30, whence he started for Berlin at 1 p.m.

BEEES ATTACK MOTORIST.

While driving his motor-car, Mr. W. Boswell, coal merchant, of Horncastle, unsuspectingly ran into a swarm of bees, which had taken full possession of the road at Langton Hill. Putting on full speed, he tried to outdistance them, but was pursued by the bees, and had eventually to dismount and divest himself of part of his clothing before he could rid himself of them, which, strange to say, he did without being stung.

PUGNACITY IN CROWS.

While a motor car was proceeding from Elgin to Lhanbryde, a crow, after circling in front of the car, suddenly wheeled directly towards the vehicle, striking the front passenger with some violence on the shoulder. As the partition screen was not attached, the crow fell against a lady behind, its beak piercing her eyelid. The crow, stunned as it were by the blow, fell at first on the road, but almost immediately recovered, and was to all appearance unhurt.

IS CARL HAU A MURDERER?

When a few days ago a competent and presumably unbiassed jury decided, after a protracted trial, that Carl Hau was guilty of the murder of his mother-in-law in Baden-Baden at the latter end of last year, we, in common, we imagine, with most who had read the evidence at the trial and were disgusted with the brow-beating methods of the prisoner's counsel, were convinced that the jury had arrived at the only possible conclusion, and that Hau was a cold-blooded murderer. The whole affair had been frequently described as wrapped in mystery, though at first sight it was difficult to tell where the mystery came in. Hau was a man who admittedly would gain, even if indirectly, by the murder of his mother-in-law—for, although he had executed a deed whereby the principal accruing from Frau Molitor was to become the property of his child, the father would for years have the interest at his disposal—, who admitted also that he was in Baden, in the supremely inadequate disguise of an ill-fitting sham beard, on the night of the murder, that he left the town as rapidly and as secretly as possible and that his alleged motive for visiting Baden, viz. to see his sister-in-law, with whom he was secretly in love, might be regarded as insufficient to cause him to make the long journey from London. It is, however, a curious fact, that, although no other person has been found or even suggested who could have reaped any advantage from Frau Molitor's death, the overwhelming majority of the natives of Baden and, for that matter, of Karlsruhe, where the trial took place, are on the condemned man's side, and so bitter is the feeling against the Molitor family, in particular Die schöne Olga, the sister-in-law of Hau, who, with her auburn locks has been for some time a striking personality in Baden, that they are unable to return to their picturesque villa whence their mother set out for the Post office on that fateful winter evening, when she was done to death within a stone's throw of her residence. It is difficult, as we have said, to account for this pro-Hau feeling on the part of the Badener, but some evidence which has only just transpired may, if corroborated, prove that the popular intuition is justified, and that the man under sentence of death is really guiltless of this atrocious crime.

With regard to this same evidence, if the account of the young woman, who is ready to relate her experience, is true, it is difficult to avoid comparing the conduct of the police with that of their South Staffordshire colleagues in the Edalji case who, convinced of the prisoner's guilt, refused even to consider any evidence tending to refute the charge. The young woman in question, a Fräulein Eisele of Baden-Baden, asserts that on reading the account of the coachman's evidence at the Hau trial, she informed the police of her experiences on the night of the murder. The chief detective, Herr Böhringer, was absent, and when after three days he made no appearance, Fräulein Eisele appealed to another policeman, but with practically no results, so that at last she made her way to Herr Böhringer's own office, found him there, made her statement, and was met with the remark, "What have you to do with Hau's defence? Do you want to marry him?" We have only the girl's statement to rely upon, but curiously enough, if it be true and if her surmises are correct, the man Hau could not possibly have been the murderer, and it is extraordinary that Herr Böhringer should not have endeavoured to have the girl brought before the court.

Schloss Strasse, opposite the Royal castle

What, then, was the drift of her statement? Before giving it we must endeavour to give an accurate idea of the scene of the murder. The main fashionable promenade of Baden-Baden is termed the Lichtenthaler Allee, an exquisite avenue on one side of which is the river Oos, on the other a wooded hill, studded with villas. Some distance above the Allee and parallel with it is the Friedrich Strasse, and above that again, also more or less parallel, is the Kaiser Wilhelm Strasse. These latter two at their Southern end are connected by a steep flight of steps, and at the top of these steps Frau Molitor, who was hastening to the Post office, which lies across the river Oos, in response to a telephone message, admittedly a bogus one sent by Hau, was shot by a man hiding in the bushes. A quarter of a mile to the North of the scene of the tragedy the Kaiser Wilhelm Strasse is met by the Bismarck Strasse which in a couple of long curves winds down to the Fremersberg Strasse, which just below the gardens of the Park Hotel is met by the Friedrich Strasse. The Fremersberg Strasse goes straight on down hill past the Allee House to the Lichtenthaler Allee, but at its junction with the Friedrich Strasse, there is a path leading down to the Allee.

We have dealt at some length with the lie of the land, so to speak, but it is absolutely necessary for the due understanding of the girl Eisele's testimony. She asserts that on the evening of the murder, she was visiting a friend at Fremersberg Strasse 97—far above, be it understood, the junction of that road with the Bismarck Strasse. On leaving her she met another friend whom she told she was about to visit this friend's mother, but at that moment she heard a bell ringing, and enquiring what it was, was informed it was the Vesper bell of the town Hospital. Finding thus that it was too late to pay her contemplated visit she hurried off down the street. When near the Friedrich Strasse she saw a man in front of her; who had obviously just skirted the grounds of the Park Hotel. The spot where she was, ill-lighted as it is, is a somewhat uncanny one on a winter evening, and Fräulein Eisele involuntarily slackened her pace to avoid overtaking this man, whose appearance for some reason or other seemed to her a trifle sinister. At the Friedrich Strasse turning the man halted, as if undecided which road to take, and he turned and in the light of the lamp Fräulein Eisele saw his pale face and was much struck by it. Eventually making up his mind he walked on down the Fremersberg Strasse and close to the Allee House found a cab, into which he entered and drove rapidly down the Lichtenthaler Allee. Her fears allayed by his disappearance, Fräulein Eisele turned to the left to take a short cut by a narrow path to the Allee, and when in the middle of this path, she distinctly heard a pistol shot. Shortly after arrival home she heard of the murder and at once, of course, connected it with the shot she heard.

Now, to a certain extent, her story has already been corroborated. The cab-driver admits taking a tall, palefaced fare from the immediate neighbourhood of the Allee Haus at the time in question, and the sound of the shot, on a still winter evening would be distinctly audible at the point where she heard it. But, if it really was Hau she saw entering the cab, he could not have fired the shot. Why Hau should have chosen so roundabout a route to the Lichtenthaler Allee,—for even if he cut through the grounds of the Park Hotel, and avoided the curves of the Bismarck Strasse, he could have reached a cabstand and incidentally the railway station far quicker by going to the South end of the Kaiser Wilhelm Strasse,—it is difficult to say, but Fräulein Eisele's story fits in with his own statement that, foiled of his design to meet Fräulein Olga alone—for she was accompanying her mother to the Post office,—he determined to turn tail and make his way back to London at once. It must also not be forgotten, that one witness at the trial swore she saw a grey bearded man following Frau Molitor and her daughter and this individual has never been traced. Fräulein Eisele will, of course, be confronted with Hau and should she recognise him as the man who entered the cab and be able to satisfy the authorities that the shot was fired later, she will go far to ensure Hau's acquittal. But the motive for the murder? That is far to seek.

CURRENT TOPICS IN AMERICA.

(By letter dated July 24th, from our New York correspondent.)

A TARIFF COMMISSION.

Without allowing themselves to be misled by the attempts of the Protectionists to postpone the question of tariff revision until after the next Presidential election, the "National Association of Manufacturers" has started a regular campaign to induce the next Congress to take in hand a revision of the tariff. It is not very clear, how the question of tariff revision is to be deferred till after the Presidential election, if the conclusion of a reciprocity treaty with Germany is strongly recommended by the Government to the next Congress. According to the view of Washington politicians, the conclusion of such a treaty would not necessitate the opening of the general tariff question; but it would hardly be possible to treat the one question apart from the other. The Association named is now endeavouring to have the Tariff examined by a Commission, which shall be a permanent one and have charge of tariff questions in futures as well. Such a Commission might gradually take up a revision that would suit the circumstances of today, without injuring economic interests as has heretofore been the case in the sudden alteration of Customs policy. The Association has long been advocating the establishment of such a Commission; and, on the strength of material from all parts of the country, it hopes to be able to convince Congress that a revision of the kind mentioned is generally demanded.

A HERO OF THE "GEORGIA".

To a young man in Uncle Sam's Navy, a German, it is due that the explosion in one of the turrets of the battle-ship "Georgia" did not lead to a far greater catastrophe, which might have caused the total destruction of the ship and the loss of the whole crew. The Captain of the ship, Mc. Crea, spoke in the highest terms of the behaviour of the crew at the time of the catastrophe. In the case of one of the victims the flesh was literally torn from the bones, yet the unfortunate man lived for several minutes, retaining his full consciousness. The Captain made special mention of an eighteen-year old seaman who had entered the Navy under the name of George Miller. It was thanks to Miller's self-sacrifice that a second explosion did not occur. He had the presence of mind to close the breech of the gun that had just been loaded, but the heroic act cost him his life. It has now been ascertained that the real name of George Miller was Benjamin Krieger. He was the son of German parents.

The New York Sun in a leading article pays the following well deserved tribute to George Miller's heroism:

"George Miller, 18 years old, a runaway from his parents' home, a lad who could not keep out of the Navy, the son of a waggoner, without the advantages of education or of family pride to inspire him, saves many comrades and loses his own life by standing to his post to close the breech of a gun just loaded. 'One of the coolest and bravest deeds that I ever heard of,' said Captain Mc. Crea. A simple sailor, this Krieger or Miller, but a soul of fire and a heart without fear. A memorial ought to testify to the bravery of this homeless lad."

PUBLIC UNSAFETY IN NEW YORK.

Veritable orgies of crime have been indulged in for some time past by the ruffians of New York. A regime of lawlessness has burst in upon the city, and the Police are for the moment powerless against it. Crimes of all kinds, into which the most various motives enter, are the order of the day, and in certain parts of the city life is at present actually unsafe. Within a quite short space of time a whole series of most terrible attacks on women and children have been reported. Attacks on children in particular have so much increased that parents have been warned not to leave their smaller children alone in the streets. In Union Square, the midst of the most populous part of the city, where an enormous traffic goes on all day long and throughout the whole night, a well-to-do Armenian shopkeeper named Tavshanjian was murdered by a fellow countryman. The murder was committed with the greatest cold-bloodedness. The murderer wounded two other persons before he could be arrested; in murdering the Armenian he was carrying out the orders of a committee of reputed revolutionaries which has its head quarters in Chicago. Tavshanjian had been called upon to make common cause with the revolutionaries and to send them money. He did not comply, and was therefore condemned to death at a secret sitting of the committee at Chicago. On lots being drawn, the young Armenian Hampart-zoomian was entrusted with the murder of Tavshanjian. The same reputed revolutionaries are supposed to have worked out the plans for the murder of the Armenian priest Vartasian in New York, whose body was found in a box some time ago. Tavshanjian was one of the most respected Armenians in the country and a wholesale dealer. It is said that the parents of Hampartoomian were killed by Turks during the disturbances in Armenia, and that he had therefore sworn eternal revenge against the Turks. He considered himself fortunate in being commissioned to murder Tavshanjian, who was believed to be a personal friend of the Sultan. While this society of revolutionaries, as they themselves declare, are endeavouring from America to prepare the way for the liberation of Armenia from the Turks, they are perhaps nothing more than an ordinary band of blackmailers.

The murder of the Armenian was followed yesterday by an atrocious deed, perpetrated by a New York manufacturer, Charles Warner; who shot a young and lovely girl, Esther Norling, employed by him as saleswoman, after she had rejected his addresses. The deed was committed in his shop. An enormous crowd collected in front of the shop, but the murderer succeeded then in escaping. A few hours later he appeared at the office of the manufacturer John Wilson and demanded money from him. Before Wilson could reply Warner had fired several shots at him. Warner again fled, pursued by an immense crowd and a number of policemen; but he managed to keep them off a long time with his revolver before he could be taken. The police, when they had secured their prisoner, had the greatest difficulty in preventing the raging mob from taking the law into their own hands, as they threw themselves upon Warner and beat him almost to death. Burglaries and thefts are also of course frequent. The Chief of the New York police admits that the police are powerless against such a prevalence of crime, and holds out no prospect of a more favourable state of things until the force is increased by so and so many thousand men. That increase the Chief of the police cannot make on his own authority; he lately took an opportunity of speaking on the causes of the greater number of crimes, and laid the responsibility for them on emigration. He asserted that the present immigration brings many criminal elements into the country. The Chief of Police has repeatedly shown that he is a nativist, but his recent remarks have aroused a storm of indignation. Statistics have shown again and again that only a small percentage of the crimes are committed by immigrants. The assertion of the Chief of Police has led to a sharp controversy between him and the coroner Mr. Acritelli, an Italian, who in a public declaration warmly takes the part of his countrymen. The accusation levelled against immigrants appears in a remarkable light when one recalls the fact that the New York police force consists principally of immigrants—mainly of Irishmen, who are very much preferred because of their tall stature and powerful frames.

THE PEACE PALACE.

The ceremony of laying the foundation-stone of the Carnegie Palace of Peace by M. de Nelidoff, President of the Peace Conference, took place at Zörgvliet, the site chosen by the Carnegie Foundation Committee on Tuesday last. This site is five hectares and a half in extent and forms part of a wooded park, formerly belonging to the Royal Family. It lies among the idyllic woods which stretch from The Hague to Scheveningen.

The ceremony was choral, the vocal parts being rendered by a quartette and a choir composed of members of the choral societies of The Hague. The Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra from the Kurhaus at Scheveningen was also in attendance. The ceremony opened with Händel's "Hallelujah Chorus" and Beethoven's "Benedictus qui venit in nomine Domini", after which M. van Karnebeek, president of the Carnegie Foundation Committee, delivered an address. He said that Mr. Carnegie was, to their great regret, unable to be present, but he had let them know he would that day be present among them heart and soul.

M. van Karnebeek then narrated the history of Mr. Carnegie's donation of a million and a half dollars and the creation with this sum of the Carnegie foundation. According to M. Cordonnier, of Lille, the palace would be of two storeys, with a façade flanked by a lofty tower. There would be two justice halls—the grand hall of justice and a smaller one—while two suites of rooms for the service of the Court connected with each of the halls were disposed on either side. On the upper storey was the great meeting hall for the Administrative Council of the Permanent Court, with attendant apartments, such as the Bureau of Archives, counsel's rooms, &c. The wing behind this part of the building contained the library, in which there would be accommodation for 200,000 books, the reading-room, map-room, offices, &c.

Such was the plan; it remained to be seen whether the finances of the foundation would admit of it being realised in all features. If not, they would have to restrain the details of the library. All the same the Foundation proposed to ask the Powers signatories of the Hague Convention to assume the expense of furnishing the court and offices.

M. de Nelidoff then laid the first stone, which bore the following inscription:—"Paci justitia firmandae hanc aedem Andreae Carnegie, munificentia dedicavit." (To peace, to be strengthened by justice, the munificence of Andrew Carnegie has dedicated this building.)

He said that the palace would be a monument of the first efforts made in common by Governments to preserve to nations the benefits of peaceful development in seeking to prevent wars. It was the almost sacred character of the building he wished to emphasise. It represented a new principle in the relations of peoples, namely, peace by justice and right, which, having received solemn consecration by the foundation of a special international institution, was about to witness the erection of a building worthy of the thought which inspired it.

M. de Nelidoff concluded: "I venture to say that a new 'cult' has been instituted in the world, and it was Mr. Carnegie, inspired by the great humanitarian idea springing from it and by the good which it promised to the world, who had the idea of dedicating to it the special edifice which he is justified in calling a 'Temple of Peace.' Let us wish that the cult may spread more and more, both among Governments and peoples, that the blessings which it assured to both may ever attract new exponents, and that the monumental tower which will crown this edifice may be like a lighthouse pointing to the nations the road of right and justice, the immutable supports of peace. And the name of the generous citizen of the United States, Mr. Andrew Carnegie, will remain attached for ever to this first temple which humanity will have erected to the new worship of peace."

Queen Wilhelmina has conferred on Mr. Carnegie the Order of Orange-Nassau.

LOCAL.

Central-Theatre. This evening Herr E. Reicher will appear again as Richard Voysin in "Der Dieb". This Piece, which has had an extraordinary success, will be given here for the fourth time.

The programme of this evening's orchestral concert at the Royal Belvedere will be as follows:— (1) Overture, "Nachklänge an Ossian", N. W. Gaade; (2) "Nordische Weisen", E. Grieg; (3) "Einzug der Bojarden", G. Halvorsen; (4) "Carneval in Paris", Episode, J.S. Svendsen; (5) Orchester-Suite aus der Oper "Carmen", G. Bizet; (6) Vorspiel zu "Die Sündflut", C. Saint-Saëns; (7) Tonbilder aus der Oper "Mignon" (a. W.), A. Thomas; (8) Overture zur Oper "Der fliegende Holländer", R. Wagner; (9) Serenade für Streichinstrumente, J. Haydn; (10) Fragmente aus der Oper "Die Zauberflöte", W. A. Mozart; (11) "Du und Du", Walzer aus der Operette "Die Fledermaus", J. Strauss.

A Dresden lady has invented an apparatus which will enable cabdrivers to sit on their boxes, while waiting for a fare, as comfortably as if they were resting in an armchair. It is a folding back and arms for their box which can be stowed away while driving. The introduction of this new contrivance is planned for the near future. Another boon this, for our excellent Dresden cabbies! If only somebody would invent a ways of teaching them how to drive!

On Sunday last, August 4th, it was 25 years since the official introduction of telephones in Dresden.

At last it seems—may we whisper it for fear the weather prophet hears us—as if winter was over. At the time of writing it is terribly hot and if we but dared to keep our readers waiting in the morning, we would shut up the office, take a train to Klotzsche—only 14 minutes—and go to the König Friedrich August Baths for a swim. These baths are really among the most enjoyable we know, nearly approaching, not only with their scenic surroundings, the joys of a sea-side resort. Situated in the Priessnitz valley, in the very center of pinewoods, and supplied with running water, they include two very large swimming basins together with all the accommodation required for air and sunbaths. They comprise two separate establishments, one for ladies and one for gentlemen.

The guards in the city today are furnished by the 1st Grenadier regiment No. 100. The guards will mount without music, but the band of the Infantry regiment No. 177 will play in the Neustadt about 12.30 p. m.

LATEST TELEGRAMS.

Gibraltar, August 5. The British cruiser "Antrim" left today for Casablanca.

New York, August 5. Enraged at the continual immoral attacks on young girls, the mob endeavoured here yesterday to lynch various individuals presumed to be guilty. A Russian who was accused of having entered a house with the intention of carrying off a child, was nearly beaten to death, and owed his life to the interference of the police. Similar instances occurred in other places. A perfectly innocent Italian was so maltreated that he will probably not recover.

LORD CURZON ON INDIA.

In a letter published in the Chester Courant of Wednesday Lord Curzon says:—

"In reply to your letter citing the statements of a Socialist speaker to the effect that the British Administration in India is responsible for the plague, and that the Indian Government has only exerted 'puny efforts' in combating the scourge, I have to say that any such statements are both grossly mendacious and ignorant.

"For nine years the Government of India have conducted an unrelenting campaign against the plague by every method that science or experience could suggest.

"But they have been confronted throughout with the appalling ignorance, the strange superstitions, and the almost incredible suspicion of the native peoples, so that the question often resolves itself into one not of scientific method, but of administrative expediency. In the early history of the present visitation the energetic campaign against the pestilence conducted by the Government on strictly scientific lines led to tumults, risings, and the murder of European officers.

"I have myself known a native crowd seize and burn alive a subordinate medical officer of their own race who was enforcing the simplest precautionary measures."
