AUTUMN.

In spite of warm mid-day sunshine and indolent blue skies more than reminiscent of the summers we once enjoyed, there has been much to remind us that Autumn has arrived at last, and with no halting steps. There is a premonitory chill in the early morning air, a crispness which gives an added vigour to the life of the streets, a freshness which brightens with new zest and meaning the familiar sights and sounds. The crack of a whip, the rattle of wheels, the clatter of hoofs ring out their fine contempt for the wearied stunted trees of the town and the sere leaves, as they lie mangled in the roadway or are whirled into the mockery of a dance by the ribald winds of October. For Autumn has been borne down upon the town on reckless laughing winds from the cold mountain caves where they dwell, and is holding revelry; especially in the evening dusk, when the grey and blue of town and sky and the palest gold of the awakening stars would move one to contemplation, does Autumn recall one to the ever-youthful warmth coursing beneath its chilly freshness. More intimate than proud Summer, more vital than plaintive Spring, Autumn stands well aloof from cruel Winter; it is the perfect Season because it is the one most full of life, of maturity. Only in the distance, as it is departing from us, empty-handed, its gifts distributed, its purpose achieved, does it seem tinged with sadder hues—such is the pessimist, the cowardly imagination of men. Autumn itself is not the season of death, but of life; not the season of contemplation, but of enjoyment. With it comes again the taste of the old Earth, as it has come year by year since Man first scratched the soil and reaped his first slender harvest; and more than ever is it good to live and to give thanks when the grapes lie heaped in purple clusters on leaves of molten gold, and the dark green and russet and bright saffron fruit is massed beside the wealth of garnered corn.

And in the country itself where the trees are still clad in their festive garb—for the brave little leaves are Stoics and eager to sink into their warm graves in fine array—it is fulness and ripeness and the joy of strength and the laughter of life that you shall find on every hand, not death and decay and the despair of Winter. The clear stream, now silver, now brown, now green, at no time murmurs more contentedly between its happy banks than when the weeping willow drops its foliage piece by piece upon the water, and the blazing crown of the horse-chestnut is reflected in its unmoving depths. The great hills are never prouder or mightier than now when the clear light sharpens and hardens their contours against the sky, and throws into deep shadow the armies of pine-trees that guard the stalwart summits of grey rock. Even in the harsh call of the raven there is a note of vigour stronger than any you can hear in summer or in spring. Not in the cooing of doves or in the soft flight of swallows under the eaves is there the same vivid and suggestive force. There is magic in the smell of acacias and the dank earth after rain in the twilight of a perfect May; there is mystery in a moonlit forest on an August night; but the emotions aroused by these things are always somewhat unreal and elusive. In Autumn there is both magic and mystery, and yet also a singular sense of reality. Something there is in the air and the season that stings the blood into sympathy. Spring which breeds rebellion and Summer which claims us in surrender can hold nothing so close and intimate; nor is there a touch of slavery in the free joys of Autumn.

AMERICAN NEWS.

JAPAN AND THE U.S.

Paris, October 14.
M. Tsuzuki, the first Japanese delegate at the Hague Conference, interviewed by a correspondent of the Matin, declared that the relations of his country with the United States were excellent. "It is absurd," he said, "to talk of a war to which such powerful obstacles are opposed as the Pacific Ocean and our mutual goodwill in the past. The American coast is too far from Japan for the latter to be able to send ships there, and there would be no purpose in invading the Philippines, for although it is not generally known, 40 per cent. of the available arable land in Japan is not cultivated for want of labour. The alarmist articles will not serve the purpose of their authors. Too much has been said about the dispatch of the United States squadron to the Pacific, and certainly it has not been understood as the Washington Government meant it to be understood. So long as this cruise is only a cruise, we need attach no importance to it."
Gen. Porter, the United States delegate, having been acquainted with the declarations of his Japanese colleague, said he was convinced of the absolutely pacific intentions of Japan, especially after a war like that in Manchuria. "Japan," he remarked, "has need of repose in order to acquire the economic and financial resources which are indispensable for her. The cruise of the American squadron in the Pacific gives no occasion for anxiety, and it is criminal to talk of a war between Japan and ourselves."

THE PACIFIC CRUISE.

New York, October 14.
The cruiser advance guard of the Pacific Squadron having sailed on Saturday, says the New York correspondent of the Globe, the date on which the battleships will weigh anchor may be expected to be announced shortly. Preparations are being hurried forward as much as may be, and the squadron will leave at the earliest possible day.
According to advices from Washington the Bureau of Navigation is making arrangements to transport an army of some ten thousand skilled mechanics to the Pacific Coast stations for the purpose of submitting the vessels of the fleet to a thorough overhaul at the conclusion of their voyage. It is possible, of course, that these mechanics may be required for permanent service if the prophets are to be believed who foresee that the squadron will remain in Pacific waters for an indefinite period.

A TREASURE HUNT IN THE ATLANTIC.

According to the Central News Agency, the yawl "Catherine" was towed into New York last Sunday by a steamer from a southern port, which sighted her in a helpless condition, a few days ago.
The little craft, manned only by Capt. Small and a mate, left Liverpool four months and six days ago, on a voyage to Honduras, and during her voyage she met with a succession of storms, which drove her out of her course, and ultimately left her helpless, several miles from land. The "Catherine" covered altogether 7,300 miles during her adventurous voyage.

TERRIBLE ACCIDENT IN INDIANA. POWDER FACTORY EXPLODES.

New York, October 15.
An explosion occurred at the powder factory at Fontanet (Indiana) at which twenty persons were killed and a hundred wounded. Buildings and telegraph wires have been affected within a thirty-five mile radius.

According to later reports, the number of persons killed is estimated at between twenty-five and forty. Six hundred are said to be injured, while twelve thousand have been rendered homeless. A school situated about half a mile from the scene of the catastrophe was destroyed, and fifty children were injured, several of them severely. At the factory itself, a number of the victims were burned to death under the eyes of the rescuers, who were forced back by the heat of the conflagration.

THE JAPANESE IN AMERICA. RIOT AT SAN FRANCISCO.

A telegram from San Francisco states that in consequence of a dispute between a drunken man and the owner of a Japanese laundry, an assault was made upon the latter. The police interfered to put a stop to the disorder. Two Japanese were injured, and have been removed to hospital.

THE EMPEROR OF AUSTRIA.

Vienna, October 15.
According to the newspapers, the condition of the Emperor is still rather grave. The latest reports describe the disorder as a catarrh of the apex pulmonis whose crisis is expected in about three or four days' time. As yet, however, there is no cause for anxiety.

An official communication states that the Emperor was quite free from fever during Monday afternoon and the subsequent night. A slight rise of temperature which manifested itself in the morning disappeared in the course of the day. At their evening visit the doctors found His Majesty's temperature satisfactory, and consider that his strength is well kept up. A sign of His Majesty's undiminished capacity for work is the fact that he listened to a report of Herr Schiessl v. Perstorff, bearing on the Ausgleich, for nearly two hours.

Vienna, October 16.
The Wiener Korrespondenz-Bureau publishes the following report of the Emperor's condition: The catarrhal symptoms are unchanged. There was no fever during the night, but the sleep was much disturbed by coughing. Again in the morning there was no fever. The strength has increased as compared with yesterday's.

The statement of a Tangier newspaper that Mr. Madden, the British Consul at Casablanca, had refused to shelter Europeans during the time of disorder is quite unfounded. Mr. Madden had been invited by Commander Mangin to seek the protection of the French Consulate, but he had refused and had remained at the British Consulate in an extremely dangerous situation.

According to the Kölnische Zeitung, the report that Mulai Hafid has asked the German Consul at Casablanca to intervene for him with the French Government, is correct. RUSSIAN NEWS.

THE IMPERIAL YACHT.

St. Petersburg, October 13.
The mystery attending the recent stranding of the Imperial yacht "Standart" thickens, writes the St. Petersburg correspondent of the Globe, and the result of the commission of inquiry has resulted in the commander, Adjutant Chagin, being put on trial, while the pilots have been found not responsible for the mishap. The Finnish newspaper, Uusi Suometar, says that the reef upon which the "Standart" ran aground was discovered last year by the surveying-ship "Opissnoi," and duly marked on the chart at the time, but that when the chart was copied at headquarters the newly-discovered reef was omitted. This omission was confirmed during the recent inquiry by comparing the charts in question.

The navigation of the countless channels and narrow waterways that skirt the coastline of Finland is exceedingly difficult, as may be seen from the fact that in certain cases the pilot has to be changed no fewer than fourteen times between St. Petersburg and Helsingfors, a voyage of fifteen hours. Naturally enough, the pilotage is in the hands of the Finns, who make excellent seamen, as a rule. However, one of the results of the recent accident to the Czar's yacht "Standart" is that Finland is to be deprived henceforth of the control of the pilot system, which is to be put under the direction of the Russian Ministry of Marine. The Novo Vremya hopes that the idea will not be carried out, as, according to the official organ, "there is not the smallest reason for supposing that the Ministry of Marine can do anything better than any one else can do it."

THE DISORDERS AT MILAN.

RIOT IN A BEER-HOUSE.

Rome, October 15.
A riot took place today in the Milan "Spaten-bräu". The mob wanted to clear the beer-house and the tables standing in front of it, but the numerous Germans who were taking their beer there drove the intruders away with chair-legs and beer jugs. The situation would have become critical had not the military appeared and dispersed the rioters.

THE TELEGRAPHISTS' STRIKE.

The Frankfurter Zeitung is informed from New York that the telegraphists have decided to continue the strike. Small, the president of the Telegraphists' Union, has been removed from his position on the ground of treachery.

THE HAU CASE.

Karlsruhe, October 15.
As the sentence of the prisoner Hau has been confirmed by the Reichsgericht, Hau, who has hitherto been treated as a prisoner under trial, is now dressed in prison clothing and placed on prison diet. He received the confirmation of his sentence calmly and without any outward sign of emotion.

The counsel for Hau's defence, Rechtsanwalt Dietz, informed a representative of the Berliner Tageblatt that he would continue to appeal strenuously for a rehearing of the case. He would once apply to the Schwurgericht at Karlsruhe for a new trial on the ground of the new facts disclosed and evidence given since the Karlsruhe trial, and hopes for better success than he had in the Court of revision.

THE UNREST IN PERSIA.

London, October 16.
According to a report from Teheran in one of the morning papers, disturbances have broken out in Kerman, where 7 persons were killed and as many wounded. Fugitives have found refuge in the British telegraph office and the Russian Consulate.

DAY TRIP TO BREST.

GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY ENTERPRISE.
Having already, with the advantage of the non-stop run, brought the Cornish Riviera within a convenient journey from London, and made possible a day trip to the Lakes of Killarney via Fishguard, the Great Western Railway Company, with characteristic enterprise, have turned attention to Brittany, and by a special visit to Brest have demonstrated the feasibility of spending a day in and around Brest, and occupying the shortest possible time in the outward and homeward journey. To dine in London and breakfast in Brest is the latest feat.

A corridor non-stop train, with attached refreshment car, was despatched from Paddington at 8 p.m. on Friday, arriving at Plymouth (Millbay Pier) punctually at 12.17 a.m. Some remarkable speeds were maintained during a portion of the run. At 12.30 the G.W.R. Company's s.s. "Roebuck" left Plymouth, bound for Brest, arriving at that famous naval base of the French Fleet at about 8.25. Breakfast ended, the excursionists found no difficulty in filling in the twelve hours which were at their disposal before the return journey. For many the old town offered its interesting attractions, while to others the country and coast near to Brest made their appeal. The inland scenery, those who know Brittany will agree, has a charm all its own, while the coast, with its blue seas and picturesque bays, appeals to all with a love for the beautiful. The G.W. Company invited a number of representatives of the Press to take part in the trip, and to these a warm welcome was extended by French confrères. At the palatial offices of La Dépêche a reception was held, attended by the best-known journalists of Brittany. Complimentary speeches were offered and returned, loyal and patriotic toasts being heartily honoured. A visit was then paid to Morgat, where a magnificent panorama of both land and sea unfolds itself. The famous grottoes were visited, and after being fortunate enough to witness the quaint ceremonies and rejoicings of a real Brittany peasant wedding, the party returned to Brest.

At what may be described as an inaugural dinner, Mr. Pope, the assistant superintendent of the Great Western Railway, explained the purpose of the excursion. If successful, it was hoped that a daily connection would be established between Brest, Plymouth, and London. As matters stood at present, a letter took two days when posted at either city to reach its destination. He further hoped that by the establishment of such a service commerce would be encouraged on either side. When the time came for the departure of the excursionists (at 8 p.m. Saturday) the whole of Brest, attended by the band of the garrison, turned out to give them a send off. There was a scene of much enthusiasm, and the "Marseillaise" and "God Save the King" were rendered with great spirit. After a comfortable journey the excursionists arrived at Paddington at 9.15 a.m. yesterday, unanimous in their declarations as to the enjoyable nature of a trip to Brittany.

MEN'S CLOTHES.

From the tailoring point of view, as, indeed, from many others, says the Daily Telegraph, the year 1907 has earned a character which can only be described as Gilbertian. In June, July and August, when lightness and brightness are expected to govern the regulation of the wardrobe, a heavy overcoat with a collar of sufficient depth to turn up comfortably about the ears was the garment for outdoor wear more in evidence than any other. September came, and at last the straw hat and flannel jacket had their chance. But our Indian summer, with its golden days and silver nights, is gone now; the overcoat season is with us, and whatever further surprises the barometer may have in store, there are many reasons for believing that this department of the tailor's business is going to be busy beyond the ordinary. For one thing, when people have been wearing overcoats almost all through the summer months, there must naturally be more than the usual demand for new ones for winter use. But there are other reasons, too. Changes of a definite kind are in the air, or, at any rate, are noticeable in the select show-rooms of the West-end, as well as in the shop-windows of those more aggressive establishments in the City and elsewhere, which the old-fashioned tailor contemptuously refers to as the "brass and glass" clothes shops.

Change both in style and in materials will denote the overcoats of the coming season; and yet, as seems to be nowadays inevitable in men's clothes, the changes are more in the nature of a return to the fashions of a former time than any actual innovation, or attempts at originality. During the last few years the tendency has been all in the direction of tight-fitting garments. The frock overcoat of the smart set and the close-cut Chesterfield of popular wear alike defined the figure, and in many cases suggested the use of corsets, or gave the idea of being worn as a substitute for them. For the coming season, although, no doubt, many coats will be made of the tight-fitting variety, the trend of fashion is all in the direction of looseness and easiness of fit. The advent of the automobile is, probably, in a measure responsible for this change; for just as the bicycle brought about the almost universal use of the lounge jacket and cloth cap for a time, so the present fancy for motoring is exercising an influence on fashion which affects men's dress; particularly garments of the overcoat class.

Beavers, chevots, and heavy tweeds are the most popular materials, and it is noticeable that the run on Harris tweeds seems to be on the wane. This is not to be wondered at, considering the litigation and uncertainty with which this make of cloth has been associated. It has been stated, with a certain show of authority, that only an expert can certify the genuineness of a real piece of "Harris"—and as the expert is not always quite sure of his ground, it is only natural that the tailor and the woollen merchant should feel a little shy of pushing a material which, if misdescribed, even innocently, may lead to an action for damages, or, possibly, imprisonment. Irish tweeds and friezes are benefiting by this change of favour, and many excellent patterns in this make of cloth, and in the ordinary makes of Scotch tweeds, are catching on. Dark shades, such as greens, browns, and olives, will be most generally worn, though greys are not likely to be altogether neglected; while for sporting wear large checks and plaids will continue to hold their own.

Velvet collars will be popular, especially for coats made from beaver, chevots, and similar materials, but for tweeds the collar will be made from the same material as the coat. Seams, generally speaking, will be finished plain, though those raised and double-stitched will make a good show. Plain cuffs, with stitching round the edge, will be the most popular form, though on the more dressy class of sleeve finish the turn-back style of cuff will be favoured. The edges of the new season's coats will mostly be stitched, some will be double-stitched, raw; while for ultra-smart coats the edges will be piped with velvet or cloth.

PLOT. Tannhäuser, the minstrel, has been sojourning in the unholy Venusberg, but prompted by a longing for a holier life he determines to leave the goddess. Her endeavours to restrain him are in vain and he returns to his old home. Here he is discovered by the Landgraf Hermann and his old companions. Entreated by them to rejoin their ranks, he at first refuses, but he yields to the entreaties of his great friend, Wolfram, who tells him that the Landgraf's niece Elisabeth still loves him. A great contest of song takes place at which, after other singers have sung in praise of ideal, pure love, Tannhäuser extols the sensuous passion he has enjoyed in the Venusberg. The others in their horror are about to kill him, but at Elisabeth's entreaties his life is spared and he, moved to repentance by the devotion of the maiden, determines to join a band of pilgrims proceeding to Rome and seek absolution from the Pope. As the time draws near for the return of the pilgrims, Elisabeth prays fervently for him and refuses to be comforted by Wolfram, when they return without him. Tannhäuser does come back and relates to Wolfram how the Pope had cursed him and foretold that he would never be forgiven until his pilgrim's staff burst into green leaves. Tannhäuser declares his intention of returning to the Venusberg, but the dead body of Elisabeth is brought in, and with a cry to her to pray for him he falls lifeless at her feet, while his staff is seen to be covered with green leaves.

 Die rote Robe.

For forms of outdoor sport, such as golf, shooting, and hunting, the tailor is evidently doing his best to meet the requirements of the game, whatever it may be, and at the same time to provide for the meteorological eccentricities which our climatic conditions make it necessary to consider. For golf we have a reversible garment, which may either be worn as a kind of tweed wrap or travelling cloak, with or without body straps, or, by turning it inside out, may be made equally serviceable as a Gaberdine—that is to say, a rainproof—cape. For shooting, which is at present a subject of some importance, a number of special features are being introduced. One or two firms catering for the sporting trade are making coats of what is known in the trade as the "slip-on" kind, in which some decided novelties are embodied. One of these is the pivot sleeve, the underpart of the sleeve being cut and made much like that of the ordinary linen shirt, with ample fulness under the arm to allow of the freedom necessary for aiming, and comfort when bringing the gun to the shoulder. In the same connection, though these are not actually overcoats, may be mentioned the garments of the Norfolk type, which have a pleat down the centre of the back, which, by an ingenious method of lacing, are made elastic, so as to give play to the shoulders when bringing the "shooting-iron" into position. For hunting, the scarlet coat of the S. B. frock type may still be classed as one of the triumphs of West-end tailoring. It is, of course, made to the regulations of the different "Hunts", as regards trimming of cuffs and collars, buttons and crests. If there is anything in the way of novelty it is in the pockets, which, where there are any pockets at all, are often made with flaps, and cut diagonally across the forward part of the skirts. Of course, they are made with ample fulness in the skirts to protect the legs when in the saddle position, the points overlapping to a considerable extent when worn off the horse. Riding breeches are cut rather less balloony, and the different kinds of fastenings at the knee become more legionary every season. The one great ambition of the breeches tailor is to produce something that will give the rider firmness of grip without the discomfort of seams or strapping. This is something like searching for the North Pole; but the ideal has been more nearly reached this season than ever before.

The Saxon Parliament was formally opened by His Majesty the King in the Throne Room of the Palace at 1 o'clock yesterday. The Ministers of State and of the Royal Household, the high officers of State, and other distinguished persons were assembled in the Stucksaal and other rooms of the Palace at 12.30 p. m.

The emptying of the Carola See in the Grosser Garten and the netting of the fish, which year by year attracts a crowd of sight-seers as well as of buyers of the fish, will take place today, Friday, and Saturday. The fish will be sold by retail on the spot. In the Restaurant and Café by the lake Herr Freytag, the proprietor, will as usual on these days include in his menu carp dressed in various ways.

THE DRESDEN GOLF LINKS.

During the recent lovely weather Golf has become quite the fashion, and the links have been much frequented. Among the crowd of players we have noticed: Kammerherr v. Könnertitz, Graf Strasoldo and Freiherr v. Gudenus of the Austrian Embassy, Baronin v. Bleichröder, Baron O'Byrn, the British Minister and Mrs. Findlay, Frau v. Knagenhjelm, the American Consul General and Mrs. St. John Gaffney, Major and Frau v. Schimpff, Fräulein v. Hübel, the Bavarian Minister Graf Montgelas and Gräfin Montgelas, Graf Wilding, Mrs. L. L. Eyre and Miss Eyre, Consul General Klemperer, Mr. Harrison Ballantyne, Mr. Virgin, Kammerherr Rains, Mr. Hallam. For years a good golf course has been a desideratum in Dresden and those to whose energy and enterprise the starting of the present links was due are to be congratulated on the success of their efforts. It may be hoped that the Dresden Golf Club, which is already a strong one, will in the near future rival the Baden-Baden Club whose annual tournaments are famous on the Continent. Enquiries as to membership of the Dresden Club should be made at the Office of the "Verein zur Förderung Dresdens" at the Hauptbahnhof, where the Honorary Secretary Major v. Schimpff attends daily from 11 to 11.30 a. m.

"THE TYRANNY OF WOMEN."

To the Editor of the Daily Record.

Sir,

Many worthy articles are written against the woman's suffrage movement, but few of the writers of these articles have ever stopped to consider what it really is they try to condemn. I am not a suffragist myself, for I do not believe in women thrusting themselves into places which, by tradition, ought to be occupied by men. All the same, I cannot help seeing that woman has her case and a very sound and reasonable one at that. Woman does not want the vote in order to raise herself to an equality with man in the arena of fighting politics, as most men seem to think she does. She wants it to further or better the laws for the protection of her own sex—we say further and better, because men have made some laws, but they are not the right ones, and if they will not or cannot make the right ones, then woman naturally, in her own interests, thinks she ought to help. For instance, why does not man take into consideration that the enormous army of working women is increasing every year? Many a young woman works, not only for her own living, but supports aged parents or young brothers and sisters. She toils all day in a Post Office, as type-writer, in a shop—and for wages that few employers would dare to offer to a man. And for what reason? Merely because the terrible necessity of her circumstances drives her forth to work from morning to night for the starvation wages which alone are held out to her—and the pitiful truth is, that man permits it. If it is owing to the incapacity of man to work for the weaker sex, why at least can he not make laws that will enable her to work for herself and her family? Things have come to such a pass that she endeavours now to take steps to make those laws for herself and her sisters.

Women are no doubt misleading and very often foolish in their methods of explaining themselves. Many people think that they wish for the vote merely for the sake of voting. They say that men, in refusing them the right to vote, place them on a footing with a criminal, an imbecile and an infant—and even then to their detriment, for a criminal may come out of prison and have a vote, a lunatic may recover and have a vote, and an infant may grow into a man and have a vote—but a woman is always a woman and therefore she can never have a vote! Such arguments as these, needless to say, are absurd, for the majority of men prefer naturally to class her as a woman, in the best sense of the word—and what more could she desire?—but they do not know how to protect her for all that. They make a law to the effect that she is not capable until she is 21 of disposing of any little property or money she may possess, but what law is there to prevent her at the age of 16 from disposing of her name how she will? When men make laws such as these why wonder that women think they are in sore need of assistance?

Yours faithfully,

Barbara.

Mr. Churchill, who is staying at Nicosia, visited the Legislative Council on Sunday, and received deputations on local matters.
