THE ROUT OF THE SOCIALISTS.

(By our L. correspondent.)

It is one of the peculiarities of English political life that municipal elections in a large majority of boroughs are fought on strict party lines. There seems no particular reason why men elected to manage purely local matters should be esteemed according to their politics as Liberal or Conservative. But so it is, and the municipal elections which took place throughout England a few days ago took on the appearance of a miniature general election. The results were sufficiently remarkable in as much as the débauché of the Conservative party in the early days of 1905 seems to have been atoned for, the Conservative party winning no less than 144 seats. The reason of this bouleversement is not far to seek. For the first time in the history of the municipal elections the rate-payers were faced by a plethora of candidates seeking their suffrages as the avowed champions of Socialism. In recent years Socialists have been regarded with a good-humoured tolerance, or even indifference, by the great mass of the electorate, but the return of the now notorious Mr. Grayson to Parliament, and the agitation which has been actively carried on by the majority of the Conservative journals throughout the country, seems to have roused the electors to a sense of the very present danger of the spread of Socialist doctrines in England. In this, their first encounter with the more level-headed electorate, the Socialists as a party have not only been defeated but have been routed. In the great industrial centres of the North, especially in Lancashire, where their orators have been most busy of late, their candidates have received scant consideration. In Birmingham, where the Chamberlain influence still reigns supreme, the Socialists could hardly hope for much success and received, probably without surprise, the news of the defeat of seven of their candidates; but in Manchester, where the Unionists suffered their gravest reverse at the general election, the whole of the Socialist and Labour representatives were defeated and, indeed, the only Socialist gains were at Middlesborough, Stockton, Sunderland and Sheffield. It is especially noteworthy that the great majority of the victories of the party most opposed to Socialism and its propaganda were achieved in boroughs which return Liberal representatives to Parliament. It is an encouraging sign that the middle classes are beginning to arouse themselves and to realise that Socialism means degradation for their inferiors in skill and energy. The successful Conservative candidates have amply proved their contention that, while the abolition of private property of all kinds and the transference of it to the State may sound attractive to those who have never desired to work for themselves or who have no ambition to raise themselves in the social scale, there is no country where wealth is so widely distributed as in England, and that it is, in consequence, highly improbable that Socialism will obtain any serious hold of the English people. It is possible, nay probable, that the results of the elections have been anything but palatable to Sir H. Campbell-

Bannerman and his colleagues. The Radical party, in spite of the enormous majority with which they returned to power, have hardly found themselves on a bed of roses since their undoubted triumph at the general election. Their adherents suffered a serious reverse at the London County Council elections, and it is a curious commentary on their pretensions that in those districts of London where Socialism was most rife the present County Council has found itself able to make the largest reductions of the rates. Now for the Government comes this second writing on the wall. The defeat of Socialist candidates they may be willing and able to explain away, but the extraordinary series of Conservative victories may well make them somewhat down-hearted in carrying on their campaign against the House of Lords. Their rout in the municipalities may indeed be regarded as an endorsement by the electors of the action of the Upper House in refusing to pass the Scottish Land Values Bill, which was the commencement of an attempt on the part of the Socialists to tax out of existence the owners of land in order that the State might appropriate their property. The Premier keeps a stout heart and continues to fulminate against the Peers, but it is significant that in spite of the large Radical majority in the Lower House, and in spite of the fact that the present Parliament is barely two years old, dissolution is already in the air.

THE EMPEROR'S VISIT TO ENGLAND.

Upon his arrival at Highcliff on Monday His Majesty the German Emperor was received at the station by the principal authorities. The town was gaily decorated and the street leading to the castle was lined with school children. The weather is improving.

A special correspondent of the Westminster Gazette had a detailed interview with a personage belonging to the immediate suite of His Majesty the German Emperor, and received permission to publish the following reports: His Majesty the Emperor wishes it to be universally known that he, as well as the Empress, are very much touched by the reception prepared for them by the Royal Family. Their Majesties have felt that His Majesty the King was animated with the desire to make their welcome as brilliant and as hearty as possible, and that the preparations arranged in their honour, during their stay in Windsor, have been the greatest success in every way; also that the Emperor and Empress have enjoyed themselves very much and that they retain an imperishable remembrance of the welcome prepared for them by the King and Queen of England. They have been impressed by the general welcome accorded whenever they came in contact with the people, and the correspondent has been further authorized to declare their greatest satisfaction. The cordiality and straightforwardness of the welcome has especially gratified them. The Emperor said: "As I was driving through the streets of London I came near enough to the people to look into their eyes and could see well by the expression of their faces that the welcome was not only on the surface but real and heartfelt. The knowledge has touched me deeply and pleased me very much. The Empress and I take with us the most pleasant remembrances of England, and which we shall never forget."

THE GERMAN EMPRESS IN HOLLAND.

On the occasion of the visit of the German Empress, the Handelsblad of Amsterdam has published an article of welcome in which Her Majesty is extolled as the noble consort of the German Emperor, who is described as a Prince of Peace, and one whose whole life is spent in working for the good of his people.

THE HOMEWARD JOURNEY OF THE GERMAN EMPRESS.

Her Majesty the German Empress arrived in Ymuiden, Holland, on Monday evening and was welcomed, in the name of the Queen of Holland, by the Master of the Horse, Baron Bentinck. Prince Heinrich journeyed as far as Amersfoort to meet the Empress. About one o'clock yesterday her Majesty arrived at the castle of Het Loo where a State luncheon took place. In the evening, at the family dinner party, the German Ambassador and his wife, and also the Secretary of the German Legation, were present. The Empress left at 10 p. m. for Potsdam.

The Panama Gold Bonds are to bear interest at 2 per cent and will be dated August 1, 1906; interest will attach from November 1, 1907. Bonds with coupons attached are to be issued at face values of 20, 100, and 1,000 dollars, whereas the registered bonds will have face values of 20, 100, 1,000 and 10,000 dollars. They are to be redeemable in gold and can be cashed at the option of the Government after a lapse of ten years, but must be fully redeemed after 30 years from date of issue. There is to be no tax on these bonds and they may be deposited as security for other circulating notes by the National Banks. In addition to the foregoing, bonds will be issued at par which are to bear 3 per cent interest from November 20, 1907.

Mr. Cortelyou's measures are warmly approved by President Roosevelt, who, in the course of a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury, states that he has been assured by reliable parties that the leading members of Congress are considering a measure respecting the currency which will fully answer the present requirements of the country, and he expresses the hope that this measure will become law shortly after Congress next meets. There is more money in the country, continues Mr. Roosevelt, than there was a month ago, and even then the resources were ample. The crops are good and business is healthy. "We should circulate the money in our possession for the purpose of meeting the present state of stringency, and there is ample wealth among our entire population. So long as all business is conducted in a legitimate manner the present difficulties will be promptly overcome, as conditions in America generally, and of business in particular, guarantee such improvement".

It is reported from New York that the principal Banks have formed a combination to take over 25,000,000 dollars of Treasury Bonds, against which the Bank of France is said to be prepared to make gold shipments.

PACIFIC COALING STATION ARRANGEMENT.

It is reported from Washington that President Roosevelt and President Diaz, of Mexico, have arrived at an understanding that will considerably facilitate the coaling of the United States Pacific fleet and small arms target practice in Magdalena Bay. It is said that the concession practically amounts to the establishment of a permanent coaling station, and that a strip of land, which will sooner or later be advantageous as a small arms range, will probably be placed at the disposal of the American Navy.

NORWAY'S INTEGRITY.

The Dagens Nyheter of Stockholm is in a position to give the wording of the treaty with regard to the integrity of Norway. It consists of four paragraphs, the first of which reads as follows: If the integrity of Norway is threatened, the contracting nations, upon receiving information to this effect from Norway, undertake to give their support to Norway to protect its integrity by the best means. The last paragraph affirms that the contract is to remain valid for twenty years, and if it is not reconsidered during this time, it will hold good for still longer. In case of a proposed reconsideration, any one of the contracting nations will be enabled to retire five years previous to the expiration of the contract. The contract permits Norway to enter into a special agreement with Sweden and Denmark for the maintenance of its integrity.

JAPANESE IN MANCHURIA.

The Japanese are pursuing a very active policy in Manchuria with regard to the establishment of telegraphic communication. Lines have been laid between Yinkau and the south, and public telegraph-offices have been erected along the route. Further, the Japanese lines have been connected with the railway telegraph to Dalny, hence communication by cable is possible to Japan and to all parts of the world. The Japanese offices accept messages to all parts, charging the same tariffs as in Japan. China has protested against the Japanese activity in regard to telegraphs, but her objections have been ignored. At the present moment negotiations are pending between China and Japan in the matter of the Southern Manchurian telegraphs. The North Manchurian telegraph question has been settled between Russia and Japan in a manner very satisfactory to China.

THE NAVAL SCARE.

The Syndicate of Discontent, which is the appropriate appellation bestowed upon a small but select clique of Admiralty critics, is evidently not one whit disconcerted by the successive demolition of its most treasured arguments. For the past eighteen months or more, certain Press organs have maintained a carping monotone of disapproval, which embraces every phase of this country's Naval policy. Alarmist writers, obviously most superficially acquainted with the complex technicality of their subject, have endeavoured to make our flesh creep with harrowing accounts of the astounding prowess attained by rival fleets, compared with the miserable slackness of the British Navy, and its crippled units. Vast Behemoths, in comparison with which the Dreadnought is obsolescent, have been launched with alarming frequency by our hated rivals, although it must be understood that these formidable craft have only materialized in the vivid imagination of fervid "patriots", and we are continually harassed by astounding statistics in connection with the building programmes of foreign navies.

Now while at first this childish scaremongering was allowed to pass unchallenged, owing to the ease with which naval experts saw through the preposterous fallacies on which it was based, of late there have been unequivocal signs of a growing uneasiness among the masses, who appear to believe that all this smoke must necessarily indicate the existence of a hidden fire, burning at the root of Great Britain's naval supremacy. In spite of the repeated examples we have lately witnessed of the marvellous efficiency in every branch of the senior service, such as phenomenal shooting, record steaming, swiftness in coaling operations, and extensive fleet manoeuvres in all sorts of weather, the Syndicate of Discontent has undoubtedly sown the seeds of national distrust, which are likely to develop into a popular demand for a searching investigation of Admiralty policy. As all the world knows, secrecy is absolutely an essential when problems of military strategy are in process of solution. No country can afford to let the public peep behind the scenes in such matters, as such a course naturally means a proclamation of valuable strategic secrets to the whole world. In all questions touching upon naval and military policy, the relations of the public to the War Office and Admiralty are precisely those existing between patient and surgeon. In each case, the only sensible course is to place implicit confidence in the expert and experienced specialist, allowing an entirely free hand and abstaining from ignorant criticism, which cannot possibly assist, while it may very easily upset the nerves on which depend the success of a surgical or no less delicate military operation. These considerations, however, have little effect upon the presumably panic-stricken critics of the fleet. They insist upon a building programme of impossible dimensions, quite overlooking the deleterious effect upon the nation's credit resulting from an extravagant outlay on armaments. They persistently depreciate not only the ships, but the men who handle them, and at this stage, their puerilities become somewhat offensive. There is not a shadow of doubt that the British bluejacket of the present day is a consummate master of his trade. That a century of comparative freedom from war's alarms has not undermined his physical courage is conclusively demonstrated by the number of seamen who volunteer for submarine service, that most perilous of all sea duty. Such service is entirely optional, and no pressure is put upon men to send in their names; nevertheless, the number of applicants, both executive and subordinate, invariably exceeds the demand. of all the incontrovertible evidence as to the adequacy of the Navy to meet every possible emergency, the alarmists gaily ride their absurd hobby-horse over the barriers of logic and common-sense, and continue to clamour for a Royal Commission to sit upon (in more ways than one) the present Naval Administration. "Lay your cards on the table," they cry. "An end to this secrecy. What matter if highly confidential plans of tactics and strategy are laid bare for inspection by foreign Powers, so long as we are satisfied you are not playing fast and loose with the nation's first line of defence." It is as efficacious to thrust incontrovertible facts before the eyes of these people as it would be to lecture a panic-stricken flock of sheep on the foolishness of taking fright at a scarecrow. You read them accounts of the recent Channel manoeuvres, when, for fourteen days in atrocious weather, the combined Channel and Atlantic fleets, numbering well over 100 vessels in all, were maintained on an absolute war footing, with crews sleeping at their guns, torpedo nets out, and nightly calls to battle quarters; of torpedo craft exercising in weather bad enough to send weather-beaten tramp steamers scudding to the nearest harbour of refuge, and of haggard-eyed men, weary from the strain of continually working their ships under most rigorous conditions. But, in reply to all this the malcontents wave you away with a superior air of being "in the know", and calmly assert that these accounts are carefully prepared for public digestion by the perfidious Admiralty. You present them with the official statistics of the China Squadron's gunnery this year, when the cruisers Monmouth and Bedford between them fired 185 rounds and scored 172 hits, in answer to which you are irritated with some pusillanimous objection concerning the target used, which they have culled from the inaccurate columns of their favourite disseminator of false news. And so the game goes on, probably the most serious feature of the matter being the number of retired flag officers who have not scrupled to lend the weight of their influence to what is obviously degenerating into a malignant personal attack on the present First Sea Lord.

The agitation is certainly not wholly actuated by party motives, since the Times, the Telegraph and other responsible Unionist newspapers deprecate the malicious propaganda in very strong terms. Therefore, it must be concluded that a genuine feeling of disquiet in regard to our naval forces is abroad, but a most cursory survey of the present standing of sea-power proves this uneasiness to be absolutely groundless. Comparisons are always odious, and far too much has already been written apropos of chimerical two-power alliances hostile to England, one soi-disant "naval-expert" permitting himself to be so far carried away by the scare fever as to seriously dilate upon the likelihood of Germany and the United States hurling their combined fleets at Britain's maritime forces. This is an exceptionally choice example of the imaginative feats performed by the Syndicate of Discontent, and to which the patient public has been subjected for many months, but nevertheless, a large number of people are only too willing to swallow these inanities.

Amidst all the storm of hostile criticism promiscuously showered upon it, the Admiralty is consistently pursuing a policy of deeds in lieu of words. Unostentatiously a new Dreadnought is launched from one or other of the dockyards, almost unnoticed save for a few paragraphs giving bare details of tonnage, speed and armament, and it is quite forgotten that each one of these leviathans represents an incalculable amount of technical forethought and marvellous constructive skill. At the present moment, the British Navy possesses no less than seven ships of the Dreadnought type, including the three vessels of the Invincible class, facetiously styled cruisers, although they have a broadside fire equal in power to that of the Dreadnought! Of these seven, the first has been in commission for over a year, while the other six are rapidly approaching completion, and this at a time when no other Power has even launched a vessel of anything like equivalent power. These are established facts, proof against even the frenzied onslaughts of the Syndicate of Discontent, and the sooner the British Public realizes that it is being utterly duped by the fatuous fallacies of pseudo "experts", the more beneficial it will be to the nation at large, since from all the alarmist beacons fired by irresponsible journalism some sparks may be emitted of sufficient intensity to ultimately cause a great International conflagration.—H.C.B.

PLOT. Don José, a soldier, is loved by a peasant girl Micaëla, but he forgets her when he meets the handsome gipsy Carmen, to whom he becomes betrothed; Carmen has been arrested; but Don José connives at her escape and promises to meet her at the inn kept by Lillas Pastia. Meeting her there with the other gipsies, in his infatuation Don José deserts; but the fickle Carmen transfers her affection to the bullfighter Escamillo. He and Don José fight. Escamillo is worsted, but Carmen stays her former lover's arm. Micaëla persuades Don José to come and see his dying mother. A bullfight takes place in Madrid, and Carmen, though warned of Don José's threats of vengeance, determines to be present; but at the moment of Escamillo's victory Don José stabs Carmen through the heart.

BERLIN: LOCAL.

At the Monday afternoon tea in the American Women's Club Mrs. Leeds presided, on Tuesday Frau von Sodenstern; on Wednesday Mrs. W. A. Derriek will act as hostess, Thursday Mrs. Webster, Friday Mrs. Howard and Saturday Mrs. Dreher.

There was a fairly good attendance when president Hessenberg opened the annual meeting of the American Association of Commerce and Trade in the spacious clubrooms at the Equitable Building, corner Friedrich and Leipziger Strasse, Monday last. The president read his report showing that the Association can look back upon a very prosperous year. In fact, it was the banner year of the organisation since its foundation, six years ago. Mr. Hessenberg who always has all the figures at his fingers end used this opportunity to discuss at length the financial and economic conditions in the United States and expressed the sincere hope that the storm might blow over soon.

The main feature, however, of the president's and all the standing committee's reports was to show what good work the Association is able to do and has done in the direction of helping the home government as well as the German government to better understand each other, to avoid wrangling about minor customhouse troubles &c. Of the greatest importance for all concerned was the coming over of two American expert commissions to study German conditions and to arrive at a "Zollprovisorium", which seems to be destined to become a definitum. The Association was able to give the American commissioners a lot of valuable assistance and information. The ability which was displayed by the board of directors and by the secretary Mr. Atwood is generally appreciated, which fact is best proved by the great increase in membership. A trip undertaken by Mr. Atwood to America where he came in personal contact with all the leading American firms doing business with Germany has been helpful to acquire many new and valuable members.

Therefore the treasurer Mr. J. Wolf jr. was able to report that the Association now has a membership of about 180 firms or personal members. This gives a yearly income of marks 18,000 against which are fixed charges of about marks 13,000 so that there is a sound financial basis to stand and build on.

The social side also was freely discussed. The committee on rooms and entertainment reported that the Association gave two great banquets in honour of the two tariff commissions, and the annual banquet. Ambassador Tower who is and always was a warm friend of the Association presided at the first tariff dinner and at the annual banquet. The one in honour of the Reynolds commission was presided over by Mr. Eddy, as Mr. Tower had to leave Berlin at that time. When Mr. Hessenberg thanked Mr. Tower for all he has done in the interest of the Association he was loudly cheered. Rather interesting was the report of the committee on publication. It reported that the biweekly publication of the Association, the Bulletin, now has a circulation of about six hundred copies and is well known on both sides of the ocean. It contains a lot of information most valuable to men doing business in or with Germany. It is to be desired that the committee's suggestion that the members themselves use the Bulletin to give advice and information concerning business affairs and experiences be carried out.

Of course, the ticket as printed in the Record about a week ago was unanimously elected and greeted with cheers when the result was announced. After the formal meeting was declared adjourned by the president a substantial lunch was served and kept the members together for some time. It was one of the pleasantest affairs which the Association has had, and added largely to its credit.

If our English sisters are not more careful, and adopt less riotous and unladylike measures to further their cause than heretofore, they may gradually alienate the sympathy of the numerous male advocates of Women's Suffrage. Quite recently again, and this time at Brighton, at a Meeting held under the auspices of the Free Trade Union, when Mr. Mc.Kenna, M.P., rose to speak on the subject of taxation, a number of women grew so aggressive and tumultuous in their conduct that their forcible removal by the stewards in attendance became a matter of necessity. There is surely not one among the countless friends women have gained since the days of John Stuart Mill, among the members of the other sex, who does deeply deplore occurrences of such a character as those which took place at St. Stephen's a year ago, and at Brighton last Monday. Why will our sisters continue upon a course of behaviour which, more than anything else, tends to expose them and their cause to ridicule, and seemingly demonstrates their unfitness for the position of perfect equality which they aspire to? It is so strange and incomprehensible, and so totally at variance with the good-sense and practical view of things which our sisters, since the days of the Sabine women, have always displayed! Fancy that at this hour, on the very eve of victory, as one may say, they should compel a man, who for years has been one of their staunchest and firmest supporters, and who had pledged himself to the Women's Liberal Federation to do all in his power to get a Bill for Woman Suffrage passed in the House, to declare, amid the loud cheers of the assembly, that if the behaviour shown by the ladies present was to be "a sample of the way women were going to conduct meetings and political affairs generally", he would have to seriously reconsider his position.

These are bitter words, forsooth. And if one will think about it, is the specific thing our sisters are fighting for—is that right of suffrage which they lay claim to—really worth fighting for? Most monstrous question, of course, and but lately the Man Abroad has been obliged to undergo some scathing criticism for putting it; and yet again and again does he ask: Are there not nobler, for more precious rights our women might undertake to struggle for than that most questionable privilege of voting? Questionable, because if they do not already possess the needful influence over their fathers and husbands and brothers, the fact of their voting for and even electing their candidate will do little to improve their lot—for in England it ever has been, and possibly ever will be, that the majority rules and the majority decides. And thus, while we readily acknowledge the absurdity of that state of affairs which, as already Mill pointed out and Legouvé demonstrated, grants a high privilege to the most ignorant of men that it denies to the most illustrious and noblest of women, still we should wish this were regarded but as a side issue, and that our women, united into a solid phalanx, went manfully into the field and demanded equal social rights as they foolishly clamour for equal political ones. Oh, if they were to assert their claim for an equitable position in life with the men; if they were to demand a just recognition of their powers and abilities; if they were to refuse henceforth to be willing objects for the gratification of the purely animal instincts in men; if they were to scorn to be either the toy or the drudge of their male companions—how much more needful were this—what a blessing would this be, for it would lead to the complete re-organisation of our human society—to the thorough re-generation of our human species! Ah, but, vain phantasies of an idle dreamer's brain that will never be realised—never—never . . .

The Man Abroad.

Mischa Elman has been engaged as soloist for the grand concert of the Mozart orchestra which will take place on the 25th of November in the Mozart Saal under the direction of Professor Karl Panzner. The concert-goers of Berlin will be all the more glad to hear this, as the gifted artist can only appear once in Berlin owing to his very numerous concert engagements, which are to end with a tour in America. The offers that have been made to the young artist by the American managers exceed, in the amount of the fees, anything heretofore known; and it says much for the artistic earnestness of Mischa Elman, as well as for the wisdom of his musical advisers, that in spite of these allurements they have remained firm and preferred to devote the greater part of the season to the giving of artistically more valuable concerts in Europe. As has been done in late years by famous conductors of orchestras, among others by Herr Weingartner, Mischa Elman will only give a limited number of concerts in America (the number contracted for is 8); but the fees that he is to receive for these are much higher than a first-class artist usually receives in America for a whole season.

The opera evening given by Frau Sophie Heymann-Engel in the Royal High School for Music on the 15th instant called forth such applause from the crowded audience that a repetition of this fine performance was to be expected.

The graceful music of Pergolesi—whose buffo opera La Serva Padrone (the maid as mistress) was produced—was gracefully and humorously sung by Sistermans as Doctor Pandolfo, and by Frau Heymann-Engel as Zerbine. Although the characteristic of the two persons in the style of the old commedia dell'arte does not go beyond the typical, the sprightly acting and refined fun of the two chief representatives aroused the lively interest of the public. The music of Pergolesi (who died in 1736 at the age of 26) is ever amusing and full of charm, and it put the audience in the best of good humour.

Der betrogene Kadi by Gluck is much more modern, both in the music and in the style of the text. For that reason this agreeable and melodious opera proved a great success for the master (1714—1787) who is best known as the composer of works on a grander scale. It was performed for the last time in the Berlin Opera House a quarter of a century ago. The recent success—to which Frau Heymann-Engel as Zelmire and Omega, Fräulein Naumann as Fatime, and Herren Henkels (Kadi), Gollanin (Neuradin), and Sistermans (Omar) contributed by excellent acting and masterly singing—may well induce the Management of the Royal Opera to repeat this delightful work.

Kapellmeister B. Sängler conducted the orchestra—which, as I hear, he only got together with difficulty—in a manner that deserves recognition. Dr. A. S.

THE PRESIDENT AND THE PANIC.

Good for T. R.! His procedure during the market excitement has been an honour to his sincerity and his nerve. A steady and long-planned effort has been made to attribute to his policies the present demoralization; which is as if a patient should attribute to a doctor's diagnosis what ought to be attributed to his own recklessness in living. With Metropolitan methods finding the light, with frenzied banking receiving its perfectly deserved reward, behold the men whose gamblers' disregard of law and caution has caused the trouble shouting lustily: "The President is to blame!" Happily the Wall Street cry will not prevail. New York and Newport, and fragments of other gilded centres, will warm in sympathy, but among the people, West, and South, and even East, responsibility for the present penalties will be placed, not upon the President, but upon the gentlemen who have the almost diverting assurance to exclaim: "See that man? He made this panic, because he helped to show us up. Let us have an end of this. Give us a man like Cannon of Fairbanks for President—a safe man. Don't let Roosevelt dictate."—Collier's Weekly.

Artist's Festival "Aus alten Bildern", to be held in the Exhibition Palace on the 9th January 1908. Grandeur than the titles of previous festivals of the kind, is the name given to this winter's great social gathering organized by the Dresden Society of Artists who have this year again joined hands with the sister group of Germany's painters and sculptors. Figures out of old pictures will appear, reviving the appropriate garb of former centuries. Yet close examination will show that—for instance, in the ladies' costumes of the Netherlands—those fashions closely resembled the modes of today. Minor details only—a longer waist, a sleeve left wide to the wrist and fringed, and such matters—mark the difference between those and present fashions. It is true, there are splendid coloured costumes of another cut which show off their wearers by the bewitching plaiting of rich stuffs (as in pictures by Retscher, 1347 to 1351, in the Royal Picture Gallery); but here also the exact opposite is found—a simple greyish-blue dress with red over-sleeves, and a white head-dress (v. d. Weyden No. 800) is also a copy from old pictures which would become some styles of figure better than a more magnificent dress. It may be well, therefore, to point out that there are in the Dresden Gallery a number of pictures which offer abundant suggestions for ladies and gentlemen of all ages. A look at the German, Flemish, and Dutch paintings in the large rooms as well as in the cabinets on the side of the building next the Theater Platz is recommended: particularly the works of Van Dyck, Van der Helst, Metsu, Mieris, Rembrandt, Rubens, Ryckaert, TerBorch, Teniers, Tilborch, Velasquez, Verkolje, and others, will be found to contain a wealth of suggestive material.

Hotel Europäischer Hof have unquestionably become less important and attractive; and it seemed at first as if Herr Sittard was not inclined to continue them. That he has, however, done so deserves recognition of his artistic courage, and that he secured the services of Fräulein Helene Staegemann says much for his prudence. It appeared indeed on Sunday last in the early numbers of the programme that Fräulein Staegemann's voice had lost something of its melting sweetness of tone, that her famed head-notes were less clear and bright; but the way in which she sang "Müllers Abschied" by Theodor Streicher, Hugo Wolf's "Elfenbein", and Weingartner's "Traumgott"—songs which are exactly suited to her style—made one glad indeed to recognize in Fräulein Staegemann the amiable, refined, and poetical artist of yore.

Herr Alfred Sittard again showed himself not only a master of accompaniment but a solo pianist of rank. It was clear that he had chosen pieces by Grieg in pious memory of the recent death of the Norwegian master and not from his own inmost artistic conviction, but like a genuine musician he was pleased to play them. On the other hand his excellent performance of Tschaiowsky's highly important "Thema und Variationen" was something quite out of the common; clearer and more poetic in effect the piece could hardly now be heard. That d'Albert's weak "Serenade", Liszt's Konzert-étude in D-flat, and his IV. Hungarian Rhapsody, followed the Tschaiowsky work did not enhance the impression it had left.—M. N.

News has just been received of the death of Mr. Edward Hudson Spear, at Evanston, Ill., on October 26. Members of the American Colony will remember that Mrs. Spear and her daughters resided in Dresden in the winter of 1905—6, where they were very popular.

Tomorrow, Thursday the 21st inst., the 5 o'clock tea and Concert of the Union of Dresden Pension Proprietresses will be held at the Hotel Bristol, Bismarck Platz. A most interesting programme has been arranged, and the occasion will be particularly acceptable to those who desire to broaden their acquaintance among the members of the numerous Anglo-American colony in Dresden. The proceeds are to be donated to the Home for Recreation and the aged of Pension Proprietresses. Tableaux by members of the foreign colony are an important item, and the subsequent Dance will certainly prove a great attraction. Those who have not yet secured tickets, which are at the nominal price of marks 3, should obtain same without delay. They may by had from the following Members of the Committee:—Fräulein Blech, 7 Ammon Strasse, Fräulein Schmalz, 25 Sidonien Strasse, Frau Oelsner, (Pension v. Briesen), 11 Bendemann Strasse, Frau Hahne, 6, I. Bismarck Platz.

The programme of tomorrow evening's orchestral concert at the Gewerbehause will be as follows: (1) Ouverture: "Friedensfeier", C. Reinecke; (2) Intermezzo (I. Mal), E. Pierné; (3) Solo für Harfe, A.
