THE STAR OF PROSPERITY.

It will be recalled that previous to the election of Mr. Taft to the Presidency of the United States numbers of prominent Americans gave it as their opinion that the election to office of the Republican candidate would result in a prompt return to that degree of prosperity which for long years has justified the title of "Eldorado" as applied to the Great Republic of the West. This opinion was put forward in our own columns by a subscriber thoroughly experienced in the economic and political system of his country, and we are thus able to congratulate ourselves on the symptomatic evidences of returning prosperity which continue to reach us from the other side of the Atlantic. In the words of a London contemporary's New York correspondent, who gives chapter and verse for his assertion, "a wave of unexampled prosperity is sweeping over the country." More than a million men who were out of work a fortnight ago are now employed or are under engagement to commence as soon as the plans which are being made for the extension of projected enterprises can be completed. As an indication of the general financial boom now being experienced on Wall-Street, which, after all, is an excellent barometer of the country at large, the following figures, showing the increased appreciation of the value of stocks listed on the New York Stock Market, merit special attention:—

United States Steel	$55,000,000
Union Pacific	20,000,000
New York Central	20,000,000
Southern Pacific	20,000,000
Northern Pacific	14,500,000
Pennsylvania R. R.	12,500,000

The total appreciation of stock values listed on the Stock Market since the election of Mr. Taft reaches the enormous figure of $2,000,000,000.

But this is not all. Steamship companies engaged in passenger traffic to and from the United States report a steady decline in the number of people leaving America, and a corresponding increase in the passages booked to that country. Hardly more than a year ago an immense volume of human traffic commenced to flow Europe-wards, fleeing from the wave of industrial depression that followed upon the downfall of several mighty financial concerns and of the smaller banking institutions that were involved in the general ruin. Ruin, indeed, stared many a humble citizen of the Great Republic in the face. The savings of years were swept away in a single day; the countless banks wherein thrifty toilers had deposited their hard-earned nest-eggs were besieged day after day by crowds of desperate men and women, intent upon wresting some measure of their resources from the chaos which had descended upon the financial world with appalling suddenness. Heartrending scenes were of daily occurrence in every State where the depressing influence made itself felt, and dozens of people who saw their only safeguard from destitution disappearing before their very gaze gave up the struggle and found oblivion in suicidal grave. Nor was the effect of the great panic purely local or confined to the limits of the Union. Europe did not come scathless out of the general débâcle, though thanks to the foresight of those who control the money markets of London, Paris, and Berlin, the shock did not find investors on this side of the ocean so unprepared, and the direct result was therefore less disastrous than it might have been. Nevertheless, thousands of poverty-stricken refugees from the States inundated their old homes, and in Italy, particularly, the ranks of the unemployed and destitute were greatly augmented by this phenomenon. In America itself the people seemed paralysed by the spontaneity of the catastrophe; one bank after another put up its shutters when the last dollar had been paid over the counter. Those larger institutions which withstood the first onslaught were unable to lend their minor brethren a helping hand, as they were themselves in the direst need of every cent remaining in the vaults. Then it was that a powerful group of financial lords, headed by Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan, came to the rescue in the nick of time, lavishly pouring long-hoarded gold into depleted treasuries, damming the stream of insolvency and arresting the wave of disaster which threatened to shake the very foundations of the national edifice. It was an inspiring spectacle. The puny forces of mankind desperately battling against a huge natural revulsion brought into being by years of sinful extravagance, the result of an unparalleled period of lordly opulence. And at last the tide was turned; upon the ruins of shattered banking and other financial institutions fresh enterprises were rapidly erected, this time with firmer foundations. Gradually the national mind became permeated with the idea that a drastic lesson had been administered, and that from the evil which had seemed without one extenuating circumstance a great good might result. We believe the lesson has been taken to heart, and that the rejuvenated and vigorous prosperity which is now exerting its beneficial influence on the United States will not be abused as formerly, but rather that it will be fostered and appreciated by all classes in America, who are anticipating the blessing of four years of uninterrupted sound administration, assured by the appointment of a Chief Magistrate whose name is synonymous with unimpeachable integrity.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

London, November 16.
Mr. Byles, Liberal member for Salford, put a question with reference to Mr. Asquith's recent statement of the Government interpretation of the two-Power standard, and suggested that, while maintaining the relative strength of the Navy according to that standard, Great Britain might think of proposing to the other Powers a mutual and proportional diminution of the expenses of protection at sea.

The Prime Minister replied that the other Powers were well informed of the views to which the British Government has more than once given expression as to the superfluous and competitive expenditure for shipbuilding which lays such heavy burdens on the taxpayers.

In the further course of the sitting Mr. Lonsdale, Conservative member for Armagh, asked the Prime Minister if he did not consider it necessary to begin at once the building of first-class warships with a view to the maintenance of the standard of which he had spoken, and whether, besides the ships that had been already voted, other ships would be laid down before the close of the present financial year.

Mr. Asquith answered, that in the opinion of the Admiralty no necessity existed for the course suggested, and that the Government did not purpose altering the programme already sanctioned.

NEWS FROM AMERICA.

THE SHOOTING OF MR. HENEY.

New York, November 16.
President Roosevelt has sent a message to Mrs. F. J. Heney, wife of the San Francisco District Attorney, who was shot in court, in which he says:—
"Like every good American, I hold your husband in peculiar regard for the absolutely fearless way in which he has attacked and exposed corruption, without any regard to the political or social prominence of the offenders or to the dangerous character of the work. Your husband has taken his life in his hands in doing this great task, and is entitled to the gratitude and esteem, and above all to the heartiest support of all good citizens. The infamous character of the man who has assaulted him should add not only to the horror and detestation felt for the deed, but the determination of decent citizens to stamp out the power of all men of his kind."

Mr. Heney, the District Attorney of San Francisco, who has taken a prominent part against the "grafters" responsible for the corruption of the city administration and who was shot in court on Friday
