WITH COOK TO THE NORTH.

ASTOUNDING STORY.

A prominent Liverpool journal on Thursday printed an astounding narrative given to one of its representatives by John Barclay, a native of Aberdeen, who states that he accompanied Dr. Cook on his voyage towards the North Pole. Barclay was formerly in the service of Messrs. G. and J. Rankin, general coopers, of Liverpool, but left the firm two years ago to go to work for himself at Reykjavik, in Iceland, and was engaged (he says) by Dr. Cook as a sailor about May, 1906. Barclay was interviewed in the presence of Mr. R. K. Rankin, a member of the above-named firm, and, it is stated, told a plain, unvarnished tale, "free from any attempt at imaginative colouring."

"Three years and four months ago," he said, "I was sitting in a public-house in the herring station of Reykjavik, when Dr. Cook came in. The three-masted auxiliary schooner Dublin, of Copenhagen (steam and sail), had put in for supplies, and Dr. Cook was in command of her. When he saw me he said, 'You are just the man I was looking for.' He asked me to join his ship as a sailor, and as I was a bit keen on an adventure on the sea, I consented. I found that I was the only Britisher aboard, and the only one who spoke English."

"Did not Dr. Cook speak English, then?"
"Oh, yes; he spoke broken English; but he was a Dutchman, because he said he came from Copenhagen. That was his native town."

"A Dane, perhaps?"
"Yes, perhaps he was Danish; but we call them all Dutchmen."

"Not an American? Didn't he speak with a Yankee accent?"

"No, not a trace of it. It was what I call Dutch. We were fifty-nine all told on board. Dr. Cook was captain, and the rest were Dutchmen, Germans, Russians, and one thing or another."

Then, continued the narrator, commenced a voyage of eighteen months, going northwards all the time. He was unable to give very exact particulars as to the route, but he traced the course roughly with his finger on the map—past Cape Farwell on the south of Greenland, up Davis Strait, across Melville Bay, into Smith Sound, Cape York, and the shores of Grantland; then through Prince Charlie's Sound, and about a hundred miles north into a natural harbour, the name of which he did not know, where the vessel remained ice-bound for six weeks. Frequently on the voyage the vessel got frozen up, but a way was forced by blasting with dynamite and the use of ice anchors. There were ample provisions on board. Questioned as to the people on board, he said that besides Dr. Cook, who was a perfect gentleman, kind and considerate in every way, were six other gentlemen, whose names he did not learn. They all talked "Dutch." Coming nearer to the alleged dash to the Pole, Barclay said that at some point—in Lancaster Sound, he believed—they picked up a number of Eskimos and a lot of dogs. While the vessel was icebound—he believed it was at a point to the north of Annotok—Dr. Cook set out across the ice, accompanied by a party of Eskimos, and equipped with 14 sledges and about 100 dogs.

"How long was the Doctor away?" asked the press representative.

"Only three days," was the reply.

"Are you sure he was away for only three days from the ship?"

"Yes, certain. He was never out of our sight for more than three days."

"Do you know anything about a man named Franke?"

"I believe there was a man with some such name. He went with the Doctor, and came back in two days. When Dr. Cook returned he had only seven sledges and about fifty-four dogs. All the Eskimos came back together."

"Do you know where the Doctor had been?"

"To the Pole, I suppose."

"In three days—there and back?"

"We understood he had been to the Pole right enough."

The press representative pointed out that, according to his own story, Dr. Cook was 700 miles from the Pole when he left his ship, which at first he had described as a yacht, and later, in his lecture, a fishing schooner; and that it had taken him four months fast travelling to reach the Pole—from December 21, 1907, to April 21, 1908—and no fewer than thirteen months to come to Upernavik.

Barclay said he knew nothing about these dates, but he was firm in his assertion that Dr. Cook had never been away from the schooner more than three days together. He left one night, and came back in the early morning of the fourth day. He took with him a flag, and came back without it.

"A flag? Union Jack or Stars and Stripes?"

"Neither. The Danish flag. On the Sunday morning he called the watch, and told us what he had done. We believed him, and were very glad. 'Thank God,' said the doctor; 'I will never come back again.' All hands were called aft, and grog and cigars were served round. The doctor was all smiles, and looked very pleased. He looked like going out of himself, and ran about the deck like a youngster."

"Did the doctor at any time say to you what story you were to tell?"

"No, not a word. He was a perfect gentleman right through. When we left him at Copenhagen he made a little speech to us, but as it was in Dutch or Danish I did not understand it. He shook hands with us and bade us good-bye."

Barclay states that he came with Dr. Cook on the homeward voyage from Lerwick to Copenhagen, and then proceeded to Liverpool.

DR. COOK LEAVES DENMARK.

An enormous crowd collected at the harbour at Copenhagen to give Dr. Cook a send-off on Friday afternoon. The steamer Melchior was dressed with bunting overall, and most of the ships in harbour followed suit. Dr. Cook arrived at 4 o'clock accompanied by Captain Sverdrup, and was enthusiastically cheered by the people. As he stepped on board the ship, he was received by the Committee of the Geographical Society, the Directors of the United Steamship Company, the American Minister, and other eminent men, and conducted to the saloon. Here Admiral Richelieu, the President of the Steamship Company, made a short speech wishing Dr. Cook bon voyage and begging him to carry with him the conviction that he had left none but friends behind him in Copenhagen and that no one in Denmark doubted his work. At 4.30 the steamer cast off, Dr. Cook standing on the bridge, and signalling his thanks to his friends and the cheering crowd. The cheering was kept up till the ship was fairly out of hearing range and sight.

The Geographical Society of Vienna has invited Dr. Cook and Commander Peary to lecture in Vienna.

BRIEF NEWS ITEMS.

A London telegram reports that a Mr. Aldred, the new publisher of that notorious periodical, the Indian Sociologist, was on Friday sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment for printing and distributing a sensational pamphlet in which Dhingra's crime, the murder of Sir Curzon Wyllie, was lauded as an heroic action.

Four more persons were released from detention in the cholera barracks on Friday at Rotterdam as they showed no symptoms of the disease. Five others, whose condition is good, are still detained. Since yesterday there have been neither cases of death nor fresh admittances to hospital.

The prison at Tschernigov, South Russia, was on Friday the scene of a serious revolt, when several prisoners undergoing examination suddenly fell upon two guards, throttled them, took their weapons and the cell keys, and set a number of bed mattresses on fire. During the confusion they employed themselves in releasing other prisoners from the cells. The military watch was hastily summoned and soon restored order. Two prisoners were shot dead, two badly injured, and eight slightly wounded.

A Melilla telegram of yesterday reads: During a scouting expedition lasting six days the troops under Colonel Larea fired not a single shot, and returned yesterday to their camp at Cabo de Gagua. Numerous Riff tribesmen have made submission. The attitude of the inhabitants appears to indicate that the pacification of the Mut district and the Muluya valley is complete.

An automobile driven by Lord Lonsdale was travelling in Westmoreland on Friday evening when, in descending a particularly declivitous hill, it grazed a wall and was overturned. Lord Lonsdale escaped practically unhurt, but two of his chauffeurs, who sat in the tonneau, were hurled out on to the roadway and sustained serious injuries.

Americans wanting to enter on the return voyage to the States are experiencing immense difficulty in booking passages at present, the homeward rush having already set in in earnest.

Owing to a sudden necessity to return to England at an early date, Lady Vincent, the head of the Girls' Friendly Society abroad, is obliged to change the dates of her Berlin visit. Lady Vincent's visit will extend from September 20 to 27; on September 26 Lady Vincent will hold a reception of the members of the Society at the Club-room, Genthiner Str. 13, and will also probably arrange a soirée for the members at her hotel.

The public meeting will be held on September 22, 23, or 24, at Lady Vincent's hotel. The subject of her address will be "The work of the G.F.S. amongst British and American Girls on the Continent."

Lady Vincent coming from Düsseldorf and Bonn is now at Frankfurt, where the G.F.S. already has a residential lodge for the help and benefit of English girls abroad.

Mr. Hugo Reisinger, the well known New York merchant and art-collector, who was recently received by Emperor William at the Saalburg, was joined at the Hotel Adlon on Thursday evening by his wife.

Mr. Reisinger's name, it will be remembered, was prominently connected with the organisation of the recent exhibition of modern German Art at the New York Metropolitan Museum.

Dr. R. W. Lovett, a well known orthopaedic surgeon of Boston, is spending a few days in Berlin on his return from Budapest, where he went to read a paper on his specialty. Dr. Lovett was the guest of honour at the meeting of the Anglo-American Medical Association yesterday (Saturday) evening.

Dr. Reinherz, Captain of the Medical Association's base-ball nine, has returned from a short vacation and is actively engaged in getting his nine into shape for good team work at the coming great game on September 18.

Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Guggenheim and Mrs. L. M. Josephthal, of New York, have arrived at the Hotel Adlon. Mr. and Mrs. David Wolff, of Philadelphia, have also returned to the Adlon after taking the cure at Marienbad.

Major von Livonius, military attaché of the German Embassy at Washington, was noticed in the hall of the Adlon a day or two ago. Ambassador Hill was also seen passing through after calling upon Mr. and Mrs. S. M. Martin, of Cincinnati, who have come to consult a Berlin physician. A group of prominent Brazilians, from Rio Janeiro, have been in evidence the past few days at the Adlon, while Juan Pedro de Baro, a sugar-manufacturer, from Cuba, said to be immensely wealthy, is another interesting guest at the hotel.

Mrs. Willekes Macdonald, of Kurfürstendamm 38/39, has returned to Berlin after a prolonged tour in the South. Mrs. Macdonald spent ten weeks at Nice, in splendid summer weather, and also visited Brunna and Frankfurt.

At Frankfurt Mrs. Macdonald spent much time in the exhibition, and found it of great interest. The many airships were of course the grand attraction, but the charming little Japanese teahouse and tea-garden, and the tribe of native Singalese are spoken of as competing very successfully with the aerial craft in their bid for popularity.

Mrs. Macdonald will be "at home" on October 1. Shortly after that date she leaves Berlin once more on a prolonged visit to Holland—The Hague, Harlem, etc.

Mrs. De Wolf Smythe and her son, Mr. F. Hastings Smythe, of Utica, New York, have arrived in Berlin for a twelve months' stay, and are at Mrs. Bennett's, Bellevue Strasse 12A. Mr. Hastings Smythe will enter Berlin University for a course in physical chemistry.

Berlin friends have received announcements of the recent marriage of Mr. Harry Sloan Hower, of Pittsburg, Penn., to Miss Sara Brown Chester, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Chester, of Pittsburg. Mr. Hower was a member of the American Colony here six years ago, when he spent two years at the University studying chemistry.

Miss Elliott, of Chicago, who has been visiting Mrs. C. L. Babcock during the past month after an extensive Continental tour, sailed on Friday for home by the Kaiser Friedrich der Grosse.

Anglo-American tourists in Berlin may appreciate the following hint as to a practical mode of sight-seeing in the Kaiser's city and its environs. It reaches the Daily Record correspondent from an English source, in the person of Mr. Whitty Chandler, of Boscombe, near Bournemouth. Mr. Chandler, who is one of the best-known solicitors in the South of England, has been touring, with Mrs. Chandler, in Berlin and other German cities.

Under the heading, "A Day in Potsdam, and How We Did It," Mr. Chandler writes as follows:—

"Two English visitors unable to speak German, and visiting Berlin for the first time, were most anxious to see royal Potsdam, with its lakes, gardens, parks, and palaces. But there was only one day to spare, and how was it to be done! As many others may be similarly circumstanced it shall be explained. We were fortunate enough to secure the services of a gifted lady cicerone, of linguistic attainments (speaking English, German, French, and Swedish with fluency) and with a complete historic knowledge of the locality. The result was that we not only saw places usually not easily accessible, but had everything explained at every point, and that at a minimum of expense. It was a day to be long remembered as the most enjoyable and successful excursion of our tour.

"Our lady guide had planned out the day for us, and, taking an early train, we visited the Church of Peace and the Mausoleum, and the gardens and palace of Sans Souci,—including Voltaire's room and the room in which Frederick the Great died. We drove through the royal gardens to the Neue Palais, to the Orangerie, and the town of Potsdam, lunching at a delightful restaurant on Long Bridge, where we subsequently embarked on steamer for Babelsberg. After visiting the Palace and grounds there we resumed the steamer for a sail around the islands. We took tea at the Pfauen Isle, returning by water to Wannsee Lake, and by train back to Berlin. Not a bad day's work, and this without hurry, or rushing, or fatigue! If a good planning of tour, economy of time, full value for money, complete historic knowledge, and courteous and refined guidance is desired, these hints must surely win grateful thanks. Anticipating the demand for our cicerone's name, it is Mrs. J. W. Stoughton, Krumme Strasse 28, Charlottenburg."

In his aeroplane flight on Friday Mr. Orville Wright covered about 37½ miles in 62 minutes 38 seconds. In spite of the squally wind, the flight was not inferior to previous ones in exactness and grace. The landing took place some 600 yards from the starting point, owing to the heating of the motor bearings.

A cablegram from Mexico City received yesterday stated that terrible floods are reported from the Jamatepec district. Sugar plantations and mills have been destroyed, while hundreds of peons engaged on the agricultural land have met their death.

According to advices from Christiania, M. Björnsterne Björnson, the Norwegian poet, dramatist, and novelist, who has been in ill-health for some time past, made good progress up to a few days ago, since his condition has been less satisfactory and he is now confined to his bed, unable to proceed with his work. M. Björnson is 77 years of age.

Lord Rosebery made one of his powerful and brilliant speeches at the City Hall in Glasgow on Friday before a densely packed and enthusiastic audience. Speaking of the Budget he said that, as it stood, it was a revolution without a mandate from the people. The highest interests of the country demanded that it should not become law. Its immediate consequence would be an increase of the want of employment through the exhaustion of capital. The principles on which the new taxation of landed estates was based might be logically applied also to investments in Consols and to all realisable property. The Government proposals injured the working classes as much as the Dukes. He protested against the landowners being ranked with criminals, and believed that an appeal to the sense of justice of the people would not be made in vain. How, he asked, would the members of the present Cabinet have dared with such a Budget in their hands to approach Mr. Gladstone, whose axiom was that Liberalism came from freedom? He refused to accept the doctrine that the Budget was only another kind of tariff reform. When so many people were ceasing to defend free trade this Budget sought to introduce an inquisition such as had hitherto been unknown in England. Why should Liberals be so hostile to individual freedom and so devoted to bureaucracy? That was not Liberalism, but Socialism. He would not take the responsibility of giving advice to the House of Lords in a situation the most grave that had occurred since 1832. He believed the policy of the Government to be Machiavellian and prompted by the wish to make the Lords throw out the Finance Bill. The Government was simply walking in the paths of Socialism. He regarded tariff reform as an evil, but Socialism as the end of all things.

The proposed journey of Zeppelin III. to Frankfurt became doubtful on Friday evening, when a severe storm broke loose over the Bodensee. At a conference of the engineers, however, which was summoned by the chief engineer, Herr Dürr, it was decided to make the start, though with a slight alteration of the route first mapped out. Accordingly at 4.30 a.m. yesterday the huge craft was pulled out of its shed, and at daybreak Herr Dürr, in command, gave the order for the motors to be set going. Gracefully the ship rose into the air, and turning her nose towards Constance started on her way.

The airship passed Constance at 3.15 a.m. yesterday and the lower lake at 5.30, following the course of the Rhine. At 7.5 the airship was over Waldshut, and at 7.30 over Säckingen; it arrived at Basle at 7.45, moving quietly over the town for about 20 minutes. After passing close to the tower of the Elisabethkirche and over the Rathaus, the airship sailed away in a northerly direction. The weather was then splendid.

Later telegrams marking the course of Zeppelin III. show that it passed over Freiburg, close to the Münster, at 9.30, amid the ringing of all the bells in the town, and then followed the line of the railway northwards towards Emmendingen. Lahr was reached at 10.55, Kehl at 11.45, Achern at 12 noon, Baden-Baden at 1 p.m., Rastatt at 1.40, and Karlsruhe at 2.25.

At Freiburg Chief Engineer Dürr threw out a telegram, as follows: "From Basle progress has been slower, partly owing to the warming of the gas and the consequent alteration of the sustaining power causing a standing position of the airship, partly owing to the head wind. Everything is working faultlessly." At Karlsruhe another telegram was dropped, for transmission to the Ila Exhibition at Frankfurt, saying that the airship could not arrive there before 5 p.m. At Karlsruhe the German Emperor and Empress, with the Grand Ducal party, watched the movements of the airship from the balcony of the Grand Ducal palace.

Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Ackerman, of Chicago, Ill., are among the numerous American visitors now in Saxon Switzerland. They are members of a party spending an enjoyable time at Schandau.

Miss Grace McIntyre, an accomplished young pianist, of San Francisco, Cal., was in Dresden on Thursday visiting her friends. She is a resident of Charlottenburg, Berlin, and four years ago spent some months in Dresden.

Mr. and Mrs. Rushford Black, of Portland, Maine, who are staying in town for a few days, visited Meissen on Friday afternoon and inspected the porcelain manufactory. Mrs. Black is a well-known collector of china, and her cabinets contain some rare specimens of the potter's art.

Today (Sunday) the Sport-Park near the Nossener Brücke will again be the scene of first-class football, in a match between the Dresdner Sport Club I. and the Leipzig Verein für Bewegungsspiele I, who will meet on that ground at 4 p.m. This is one of the test matches of the season and generally serves as a measure of the respective standards of the rival cities for the time. The D.S.C. I. will be a good team, and may be trusted to do their level best to win; but rumour has it that they are not unlikely to be overmatched. The eleven will be constituted as follows: Leipzig—Winkler, Utermark, Heses, Grilling, Ugi, Rubin, Fischer, Riss, Dolge, L. Richter, and Börner; Dresden—Wünsche, Hecht, K. Richter, Assmann, Fischer, Klemm, Gross, Neumann, Wolf, G. Richter, and Berhardt.

It has been remarked by those who have the best reason to know that Dresdeners are apt to postpone their visits to the great exhibitions that take place year after year in the Exhibition Palace until towards the end of the season. It is considered desirable, therefore, to call attention to the fact that the International Photographic Exhibition of this year, which is full of instruction for all who are interested in photography and its multifarious uses, will positively close on October 15. Parties will be conducted through the Korn tele-photograph section today between 11 and 1 o'clock, and from 3 to 5 in the afternoon. The concert begins at 4.30 p.m. and lasts till 10.30.
