

pleasant company. Places of this kind, frequented by the most respectable classes, are:

Garten-Restaurants.

Belvédère, and Café Real, on Brühl's Terrace. Both the places afford a nice view of the river Elbe. In summer there are open-air concerts almost every evening. They are a favorite resort of the English and Americans residing in Dresden.

Waldschlösschen, Schillerschlösschen, Linckesches Bad; all three of them in Schillerstrasse on the way to Loschwitz. — Feldschlösschen in Chemnitzer Strasse; Reisewitz, near Plauen; — Felsenkeller, and Begerburg, delightfully situated in the Plauen'schen Grund; — Bergkeller, at the end of Bergstrasse. — Grosse Wirthschaft in the grosse Garten.

In all these places there is tolerably good music on certain days of a week, and especially on Sundays. In fact the music forms a great attraction, and is usually advertised in the papers.

Public Baths.

Dresden is provided with a good number of Bathing-establishments. Their arrangements leave very little to desire. The best of them are:

Dianabad, 15<sup>b</sup>, Bürgerwiese. Warm and cold baths, shower, vapour, and Irish-Roman baths. Open to Ladies: Mondays from 3—8 o'clock. Wednesdays and Saturdays, from 7—1 o'clock.
