

lions, wolves, and other wild beasts; and many a bear-baiting, and combat of beasts, took place in the court of the royal palace, and in the old market-place, fenced in for the purpose. At that time the Jägerhof could boast of splendid apartments. Now it is filled with the bustle and din of soldiers, instead of huntsmen; and the former merry clang of bugles, and the exciting halloo on starting for the chase have died away. —

An Asylum for the Blind, and another for the Deaf and Dumb, are in Chemnitzer Strasse.

The Stadt-Krankenhaus (General Hospital) situated in Friedrichstrasse occupies the Marcolini Palace which was bought for the purpose in 1849. It contains 625 beds in a great number of general sick-rooms and several private rooms. The garden, attached to the building is of great extent, and mentioned more particularly among the "Public Gardens."

In cases of serious illness that make a particular and long treatment and unintermitting attendance indispensable, Strangers, without friends in town, are advised to remove at once to this hospital which bears an excellent reputation. They will enjoy there a separate room, together with the best medical assistance and most careful attention, at the low charge of 1½ Thlr. per day. —
