

ALL FOR ABDULLAS

DRUGGED

"Sir Montague Chuffin," laughed Vaahit the Crook, "is a frisky old geezer I'm certain to hook. I shall flatter him sweetly, and teach him to dance. And imply he's a 'lad' with a conspiring glance. Till he begs me with ardour to dine at his flat. For a snug cete-a-vite and a nice little chat."

Just a chloroformed handkerchief pressed to his nose. And he'll gurgle and snort into pig-like repose! International Crooks prize more exquisite things. Than a banal assortment of fishknives and rings. My adorer will yank out the last of his hair. When—beware of ABDULLAS—be woken to despair!

THE HOLD-UP

Victor and Vaahit—Society Crooks. Of the slim, slinky type one encounters in books. Are Mayfair's smartest experts at killing. They chloroform victims and carve them in chunks. Or fold them up neatly and pack them in trunks. With an "esprit" and "chic," that is thrilling.

When they "hold-up" a Night Club with emites grace. And an exquisite "sangfroid" that dazzles the place. They appear in more lovable colours—"Sheds" pearls are returned with a bow and a smile. And real ropes leave them cold in a very short while. But they beam at each haul of ABDULLAS!
