

When a Man Steps Out on Easter Morn

His Stride Is Measured By The Smartness Of His Clothes

HE KNOWS that his "topper" sets at an interesting angle, that the neckline of his cutaway coat hugs an impeccable wing collar, that his trousers drape naturally and fall correctly just over the instep in fitting relation to spats and shoes. And if his stride assumes a confident briskness it is born of pardonable pride in being smartly groomed. ¶ The quest for finer clothes has, more than ever this Easter, led thousands of men throughout the Metropolitan area to the Bamberger Men's Sections.
