a letter or occasionally a whole word on its head, one or the other important word in wrong order, to write backwards, as it were, or to print every letter of a word double, to balance them symmetrically against one another and thus to achieve the most unique decorative effects.

An "enfant terrible" has broken in upon the printing world. But it is all done in the best of humors and with real wit, by a man whose head is teeming with fresh surprises which he at once carries out, without any long-winded attempts at revision, impulsive and bright just as heaven put them into his head.
