

by it. It is not the content, but always the form which is the surprising feature in Hadank's work, and this must be the case with every true work of art. His craftsmanlike discipline, his respect for even the most trivial, apparently uninteresting task, have something compelling.

The most extensive task which has fallen to Hadank's lot up to the present, was the fashioning of all wrappings and advertising for the Cigarette factory of Haus Neuerburg. The proprietor's will to culture has caused all wrappings and advertising issued by this firm to develop in the course of a few years into a unity the
