mark to the large poster. Various posters have been very successful on account of their exceedingly well-chosen coloring, their dignified and charming humor, and their propagandistic effectiveness. It is not only the fine line and the certainty of perspective that account for this success, but also the strong sense of color peculiar to all Onorato's work.

His art is continually developing and does not stand still and become benumbed at a certain point, as is the case with so many artists. Although he always has his own style and his own characteristics, he invariably understands how to go with the times and accomodate himself to the public taste. This is the best proof of his capability to continue developing, and he will certainly do so.

Onorato is thirty years of age, was born in Apulia and has lived in Rome for many years.
