of colored offerings, but this time neatly divided, each in its appointed place.

In another design we see wireless tower rising out of the midst of surrounding skyscrapers and growing above these into sheer immeasurable heights; this is not only visioned most admirably, but also carried out with great exactitude and force, with circling wireless waves drawn in. It is a proof that Einhorn can do more than merely carry out the rich variety of his ideas in an arbitrary manner. Besides, his manifold compositions reveal greater gifts, just on account of the elaborate execution of details already referred to, than many a drawing by other artists which at first sight appears clearer and more realistic. Einhorn's drawings not only reveal talent but at the same time manifold possibilities of being put to practical use. Trans. by E. T. Scheffauer.
