Hrderi,

Amis will so sorely, and hast foolishly cast thy life into peril of peace with death. @ If thou wouldest but take back the wyte which who will thou layest on me, and leave none of it this mortal battle, thou may, est have my friendship and my service."

AUC Arderi, as one out of his wit, answered him:"I will nought of thy friendship nor thy service : but I shall swear the sooth as it verily is, & I shall smite the head from off thee,"

GOO Hrderi swore that he had shamed the King's Daughter, & Amis swore that he lied; and straightway they dealt together in strokes, & fought Hrderi is together from the hour of slain. King tierce right on till nones @ Charles And Arderi was vanquished, gives & Amis smote off his head. Amile his

She King was troubled daughter that he had lost Hrderi; yet was he joyous that his daughter was purged of her guilt . And he gave to Hmis his daughter, and a great sum of gold and silver, & a city hard by the sea wherein to dwell. And Amis received the same with great joy & Then he returned at his speediest to his hostel wherein he had left Amile his fellow; but whenas Amile saw him coming with much
