Yet there are many strong personalities in positions of authority who know that the most elaborate organization, the most convincing statistics and the most exact calculations can never be of so much value as the inspiration of a creative mind and the arrangement of the artistic details. It is to these men that this issue is dedicated.

It is no easy task to describe this type of man. They are to be found in all sorts of positions in government, municipal and private undertakings, and they are not really the men at the draughtsmen's tables but those with natural instinct for discovering the artists whom they employ.
