

How proud and free the carriage of a classical statue! How upright and self-confident its pose!—But notice that there is not the smallest hint of strain . . . Greeks and Egyptians alike knew that general well-being was the secret of beauty, and that the secret of health and happiness was harmonious carriage which could only be obtained by correct support. To-day, MARIAN JACKS makes it her business to teach modern women to walk, sit, stand the way Nature intended that they should. She will be delighted to give you the benefit of her long experience in all questions of individual carriage.

The smartest women of four great modern capitals. New York, where towering skyscrapers tower against bright blue sky; Moscow, where golden pumpkin domes rub shoulders with mighty edifices in steel and glass; London and Paris, where past and present have combined to form a mellow and harmonious whole—are incident in their grace of clothes created by Dilkusha.
