Another is the careless impudence with which one laughs at one's own self, and even—at potential customers! What are not dignified lords, ambassadors, admirals and kings supposed to have done before or after enjoying these fruits of paradise? They are depicted as jubilant children, as people with secret vices or even as murderers, so violently do these delicacies let loose men's passions! All this is reproduced with incomparable skill in drawing and with incredible simplicity. It is indeed difficult to say who is deserving of the greater praise, the Stuart Agency who can produce such work or Fortnum & Mason who ordered it to be done.
