Franco Mosca, a young artist, started his career as a certificated engineer in the textile industry but his activities were soon directed towards advertising art and painting. He is entirely self-taught having trained himself in those branches of art without ever attending art classes or academic courses of instruction. His one great ambition was to produce something really good. A devoted admirer of the old masters and a fervent worshipper of the beautiful wherever it is to be found, Franco Mosca allows himself to be guided entirely by
