ven members of the Society to design 22 packages for the main varieties of gifts. And it must be acknowledged they did nobly, although with the exception of L. Burger not one of them had any connection with advertising art. Scherres and Haun, for instance, were landscape painters, Scherenberg and Heil caricaturists, Brausewetter a painter of military scenes. Obviously, present-day standards of package design must not be set when viewing their work. Prototypes were entirely lacking, the prevailing trend of art was absolutely undecorative, pictorially-rea-
