well-balanced picture that is quickly and easily grasped. Grant studied engineering before he started his career as an artist and this experience is of considerable assistance to him in his present work. He still confesses to a secret pleasure in descriptive geometry, to an exact mathematical construction. He cannot conceal it and is perfectly right in not wishing to do so. In his case the æsthetic sense lends a lighter note to the purely practical design and thereby creates the personal touch that is a feature of Grant's work. Translated by Flora Salmond-Volkman
