

Photos: WILHELM JACOB-Berlin

of the place. The mighty freestone structure with the walls of unequal height demanded lettering corresponding to its monumental character, as well as harmonizing with the material of which it is built. Böhm was eminently successful in solving this problem by chiselling away and hollowing the surfaces surrounding the contours