

fortunately it did not prove an obstacle to his progress. The reverse was rather the case. This failure only strengthened him in his dogged determination to make his own way in the world in which he was helped by his tenacity of purpose and clearly defined goal. Hanns Wagula studied under artists of his own choice in Berlin and Vienna before settling for a year in Marseilles. From here he went on study-trips to Tunisia, Algiers, Morocco and Egypt. He was successful too
