work. Frau May is fully justified in designating the manufactory which she herself founded and now directs as "conscience dictating the taste of the German textile industry." The fabrics shown in these pages are the products of her work-rooms and samples of the process of film and hand printing. They give an insight into the work of the manufactory but above all they are vivid pictures of the various forms and media used by Frau May as she endeavours to carry out her programme in the field of artistic design.
