ramental Italian must have full scope for his talent brimfull as he is with vitality, plans, ideas. You might say he could just as easily have made a distinguished painter or sculptor, and those who follow the careers of our best poster artists know that they all possess great original talent. Sepo's distinctive feature is the remarkable ease with which he adapts himself to every new idea connected with his work. He has the gift of expressing what is striking in every new conception and his drawings are full of vigour and bold effects. Attention should here be directed to the "Castell" poster. Here a simple and suggestive picture
