external appearance of the objects for which appeal is to be made as to make clear to the eye the practical advantages of the underwear in question. Robert Henry has been most successful in fulfilling this elementary demand. He is quite aware that here it is a matter of depicting as convincingly as possible the practical advantages of useful objects and that any attempts at beautifying them or

A shop window poster for Kübler Hanna underwear. It features three silhouettes of women wearing different styles of underwear: a long-sleeved top and skirt, a pair of leggings or tights, and a pair of shorts or briefs. The brand name 'Kübler Hanna' is prominently displayed at the top. Below the silhouettes is a circular logo with a figure sitting at a desk, and the text 'Beinkleider u. Prinzesströcke'. At the bottom, there is a list of product benefits in German.
