In the face of wartime difficulties one may regard in terms of a special achievement what under normal economic conditions would be taken for granted, namely, the cultivation of tasteful shop-window dressing not only in large cities but in many provincial towns also. That this today is the case has been strikingly demonstrated in the pictures of shop-window decorations shown in the current issue and which were recently displayed at Scheiner's in Graz. Elfriede Dreger-Schindler, a young artist and incidentally a native of Graz, designed this interesting work. She received her initial training at the Graz Arts and Crafts School, then continued her
