

Kiril Arnstam (6 Jahre alt)

will be no carriage to you when you grow up. Well, now I may state here scullery work is a work I love, and you won't get many people to say that, and if you can get man or woman in that mind, you lay the foundation stone, as it were, to success. I commence the day's work by laying the breakfast, butter the bread, and then wash all crockery, tins, and all the necessary things connected with same. Then it is the same dinner time and tea time. I find all my cans, tins and things connected with the same require special attention, which I take a great interest in. If your utensils, etc., are not clean, you will not get the success you desire or deserve. I will tell my readers here the years that I have done scullery work, that I have never missed being at my post and ready for action only for a fortnight, when I was ill. I would refer one and all to the officer who has been in charge, who would no doubt gladly tell you the same. I am willing to be judged by my work, and also I may state if any lady, who all know something of the work, would give me a call, I would be delighted to receive a few useful hints, when they have had a look round my little establishment. I would like to say if anyone has suffered any trouble or bereavement, get interested in some work. You will find it induces natural sleep, which will bring great comfort. I was like a great many more, I lost two sons in the great war. You will find that you have not much time to think. I would like to mention here that kind friends who, in my trouble, spoke such kind words to me, accept my sincere thanks.

Great care must be taken with the crockery ware or else the breakages would be terrific. I am always watching over them. There are between sixty and seventy patients in the ward, so it will give you some idea of my work. I would like to call attention to one thing—keep your cleaning cloths and brushes thoroughly clean, then half your labour is done. I am only surprised